Halloween

Trick or Treat hours for communities serving Fort Shafter, Wheeler Army Air Field and Schofield Barracks military families are Monday, Oct. 31, from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. only.

Children under the age of 10 require an adult escort, and parents must ensure children follow these safety tips:

- Dress in light-colored clothing (or parents should sew reflectors on dark clothing).
- Take precautions when crossing streets and use crosswalks.
- Wait for the proper traffic signals.
- Look both ways before crossing the street.
- Watch out for cars turning at intersections and leaving or entering driveways.
- Stay on the sidewalk, whenever possible.
- If there is no sidewalk, walk on the left side of the roadway facing traffic.

BELLOWS AIR FORCE STATION — Representatives from the Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) at the University of Alaska-Fairbanks, the University of Guam and the University of Hawaii met here Oct. 21 for the fifth annual Ranger challenge.

These young college students gather every year to battle for the Task Force Pacific Rim ROTC Ranger Challenge Championship, which consists of six events: the physical training test, land navigation, the rope bridge, a grenade course, weapons assembly and a 10-K road march.

All events must be accomplished as a team of nine leaving the tenth cadet from each school as an alternate. Teams must also be coed, so at least one female comprises every team of nine.

"The events are physically challenging, so they will be smoked by the end of the day," said Lt. Col. Carlos Perez, commander of the UH Army ROTC. "They must be accomplished as a team so that one student can't win the events for you," he added.

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — A couple of weeks following the Association of the United States Army conference in Washington, D.C., AUSA's top executive visited Wheeler Army Air Field and here, Oct. 19.

Retired Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, former Army Chief of Staff, traveled alongside retired Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie Spencer, AUSA's director of noncommissioned officer and Soldier programs, as they spoke to 25th Infantry Division (Light) leaders and observed Soldiers in training.

The first stop of the tour was the Military Operations in Urban Terrain site here, where Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 5th Infantry Regiment, were conducting micro air vehicle (MAV) training.

909th QM heads out for Iraq

17th Public Affairs Detachment

Since 1982, the 909th Quartermaster Detachment has participated extensively in humanitarian support missions to provide water to people affected by typhoons, floods, earthquakes and other disasters.

Another chapter in the history of the unit was written Oct. 25 when 21 Soldiers prepared to deploy to Iraq in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

The 909th QM Det. is located at Fort Juan Muna in Deddo, Guam, home to four Reverse Osmosis Water Purification Units. Each unit is capable of producing 3,000 gallons of either potable or non-potable water every hour.

"Today marks the end of 90 days of hard training and preparation," said Maj. Gen. Donald J. Goldhorn, adjutant general, Guam National Guard. "Your mission is clear... you will provide water support to an ongoing mission. Carry with you not only the distinction of your unit but also the distinction of the many other units from Guam who are serving in Iraq and Afghanistan."

Currently, 21 Guam National Guard Soldiers in the 909th QM Det. operate the Reverse Osmosis Water Purification Unit and are proudly called the "water dawgs."

In a speech read by Goldhorn, Gov. Felix P. Camacho, the governor of Guam, said "Words cannot explain my gratitude for your service. You are Soldiers of freedom and ambassadors of peace."

Some of the unit's most notable humanitarian support missions include Palau in 1996, where it produced 12,000 gallons of water for the residents of the main island, Koror; and September 1997, July 2002 and December 2002, when the unit was called upon to provide water support to the thousands of residents of Guam and the surrounding islands when typhoons Paka, Chatta'n and Pongsona struck the territory and the Federated States of Micronesia.

The detachment's water capabilities have been instrumental in providing essential aid to communities in moments of crisis.

While this is the unit's first deployment to a combat zone, the Soldiers have maintained their morale and are

Family programs still remain our top priority, Army says

Three-fourths of enlisted and officer homes are now connected to the Internet, so the Army will increase virtual communications to Soldiers and their families

Tim Hipps
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — More than $200 million has been earmarked this fiscal year for Army family programs said the Army's top personnel officer.

"We've been pushing this for years, and it's gotten better and better every year," said Lt. Gen. Franklin L. Hagenbeck, deputy chief of staff, Army G-1, one of numerous speakers during a three-day family forum Oct. 3-5.

Family readiness groups are an official program of the Department of the Army and, as an official program, commanders can now use mission funds to support FRGs the same way they support other mission activities. Hagenbeck said the Army is counting on families' feedback to help ensure the money is properly allocated.

'Support families in Transformation'

Hagenbeck and other military leaders speaking at the family forum, part of the Association of United States Army's annual meeting, stressed the importance of supporting Soldiers and their families during the Army's transformation.

"Too often we focus exclusively on those of us wearing uniforms, but I will tell you that all of you in this room recognize full well that it's much, much more than that," Hagenbeck said. "We need in many instances to do a better job than we do today in recognizing all the families, spouses and supporting agencies that reside inside our Army and all their components."

Hawaii educators, military collaborate in D.C.

Leaders discuss how kids transition with the Army at 2005 education summit

October 20–21, at the Grand Hyatt in Washington, D.C., I attended the 2005 Education Summit, “Communities Working Together to Improve Student Transitions.” This summit was designed to provide a better understanding of the Army’s transformation and re-basing plans and how they will affect our community.

The summit aimed to strengthen partnerships, share ideas and identify actions and roles. Local military and education leaders valued the unique opportunity to help transform how military-connected students will transition into and out of local public schools.

Representatives from the military and education leaders from each of the communities focused their time on working as a community team, concentrating on issues, opportunities and challenges. Our community team included Clayton Fujie, Hawaii’s deputy superintendent; Col. Howard Killian, U.S. Army, Hawaii, garrison commander; Dr. Nancy Bresell, Department of Defense Dependents (DoDDS) Schools Pacific director; and Charles Toth, superintendent for the Korea District DoDDS.

Through our speakers and workgroups, each community team walked away with a good start on their local community action plan.

Locally, the Joint Venture Education Forum is a partnership with Hawaii’s military branches and the Hawaii Department of Education. JVEF is a unique program that targets military-impacted public schools here in Hawaii.

Through its venue, we have supported the Aloha Military Family and Student Web Site, provided a Military Culture Course for educators and incorporated transition programs in many of our schools.

The Army in Hawaii is an active participant and partner with the Hawaii Department of Education and will continue to embrace its shared responsibility in the education of our children.

In study after study, researchers confirm how important it is for parents to be actively involved in their child’s education. When parents are involved in their child’s education — at home and at school, they do better. With active parent involvement, we can make a difference.

I encourage all parents to attend Parent-Teacher Association meetings, to volunteer at their child’s school and to sit in on classes. Tropic Lightning!

enrolled, or planning to enroll, full-time in the fall of 2006 in an undergraduate program of studies leading to a Bachelor’s Degree at an accredited college or university and must have a minimum cumulative grade point average of 3.0 (on a 4.0 basis). Please visit www.militaryscholar.org for more information and to download the scholarship application. An application, essay (500 words or less), transcripts of grades, and a letter of recommendation are due to the local commissary in early February. Students are encouraged to visit the scholarship website in November for the specific February 2006 deadline and for the topic of the essay.

For more information about scholarships and post-secondary information, please contact the Youth Educational Liaison Officer at 655-8326.

The Scholarships for Military Children Program, also known as the commissary scholarship, is available to unmarried children (under the age of 23) of active duty, Reserve/Guard, and retired military personnel. Applicants must be

All need ‘a healthy dose of spiritual fitness ... private faith’

Sometimes it amazes me what others can do. I am often impressed by the accomplishments of “ordinary” people who demonstrate an extraordinary level of leadership and service in our community.

Military families have these types of leaders in every home.

I am also surprised by how so many have risen from meager beginnings to heights of leadership. I want to remind you that you indeed have great potential to accomplish your goals and God’s purpose for your life.

It is reported that Fred Astaire’s potential was not exactly evident to those who first viewed his performances. Attracted to Hollywood as a young dancer, Fred Astaire submitted himself to the usual screen test. The verdict has become part of film history: “Can’t act. Slightly bald. Can dance a little.” What does this tell us?

It tells me, that others can’t always see what lies beneath the immediate surface, and that many don’t look toward our future potential when they pass judgment on our first try.

I want to encourage you today to know that our loving God sees beneath the surface, and his purpose for your life is a perfect fit for your personality, gifts, wounds and talents.

1 Samuel 16:7b reminds, “Man looks on the outward appearance, but God looks at the heart.”

Nothing escapes God’s notice, and his forgiveness allows us to learn from our mistakes so that we might spare others and be forgiving when wronged.

His word is not just authoritative, it is life-giving in its inspiration to grow and mature. His community, when we gather as believers, is molded to be a body — with each member having a role and place to contribute.

Just as we build and transform our Army units into new fighting teams with just the right type and amount of equipment and personnel, so too our community of believers is in the business of being transformed each day in so many ways.

Many individuals and several of the chapel congregations are exploring the “Purpose-Driven Life” best-selling book with the goal of growing into the people of God that we were meant to be. It has been my joy to watch Soldiers grow and develop from the raw recruit to the enthusiastic Soldier, and finally into dynamic combat warriors and leaders.

It is a remarkable process, with many forces and factors bearing down on their lives to produce the most capable, committed, compassionate fighting force in our world. It has also been my privilege to see how so many of these strong men and women balance their lives with a healthy dose of spiritual fitness and private faith on their journey.

Next month, chaplains will host an interesting and inspiring speaker at Schofield Barracks. Dave Roeвер will come to share his story with humor and conviction.

Wounded and disfigured from a combat injury in Vietnam, Roeвер faced a difficult series of surgeries and challenges throughout years of recovery. With his faith and the support of his loving wife, he not only survived — he thrived!

He comes to share his testimony and bring encouragement to us all, wherever we may be on the journey.

All in the Army Hawaii communities are invited to attend three upcoming events, Nov. 22, with Roeвер. Further, if you are not yet connected to a worshipping community of faith, I invite you to join together with others on your journey.

If you are already connected, then be encouraged that even if your potential may not be evident to others, it is “front and center” with our God.

Finally, be encouraged that your contributions at work or at home make our community stronger and more stable. Together we are enhancing a solid foundation for any and all future challenges that we may face together.

High-tech MAV will battle with Soldiers

Story and Photos by

SCHOFIELD BAR-RACKS — While on a dis-mounted patrol along a rocky dirt path, Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 5th Infantry Regiment, stayed alert of their surroundings as they made their way to the Military Operations in Urban Terrain site here.

When it was time to enter the site, the platoon-sized element stopped in the wood line and came up with a plan of action. Minutes later, a micro air vehicle (MAV) operator called and provided information on enemy locations.

As soon as the troops had a good location of the enemy, they maneuvered on to the site grounds. When the enemy spotted the troops, a firefight ensued.

The troops remained alert and moved tactically into nearby buildings. They cleared every room until they reached the rooftops, where they began to return fire. Using its two onboard cameras, the MAV system assisted the troops in figuring out where the enemy was located.

“I think this training is good for us because it’s new equipment that a lot of people haven’t gotten the opportunity to train with yet,” said Pvt. Gregory Goodrich, a cavalry scout with 2nd Bn., 5th Inf. Rgt.

“It isn’t just training on the MAV equipment, it also helps us train more on our tactical and basic Soldiering skills,” said Goodrich, who was one of the MAV operators during the training.

The MAV technology was designed to gather and transmit information to Soldiers on the battlefield.

Above — Pvt. 2 Gregory Goodrich, MAV operator, puts the MAV system together while the rest of his platoon is being fired upon by the enemy.

According to the Website, spacewar.com, each MAV system is comprised of two air vehicles, a dismounted control device and associated ground support equipment that is carried by selected platforms and dismounted Soldiers.

The MAVs use autonomous flight and navigation with vertical take-off and landing and recovery capabilities.

Two cameras are mounted on each MAV; one looks ahead of Soldiers, the other looks down at the ground. The MAVs also carry chemical sensors.

“The MAV vehicles are the future,” said 1st Lt. Mario A. Quevedo, a platoon leader with 2nd Bn., 5th Inf. Rgt. “These young Soldiers that are out here training with it will see it again, and they will already know how to use it.” For the past month, 40 Soldiers from 2nd Bn., 5th Inf. Rgt., have been training with the new, high-tech MAV.

“This training is very beneficial to these Soldiers because when we go down range in the future, this equipment will go with us,” Quevedo continued. “The MAV vehicles are here to stay.”

BAGRAM, Afghanistan — Teamwork is what it’s all about as active duty and reserve Soldiers from all over the country clad in both desert and woodland camouflage work fervently to re-assemble CH-47 Chinook helicopters on the south end of the airfield’s flight line here.

The units and their CH-47 helicopters have come from around the world to be a part of Task Force Quake and provide humanitarian assistance and relief to victims of Pakistan’s 7.6 magnitude earthquake on Oct. 8.

With many of the roads blocked as a result of the earthquake, helicopters are the only fast and efficient method of delivering relief aid to many earthquake-stricken areas.

“Everything that you do over there, you’re either saving someone’s life, feeding children or making someone warm. That’s the mindset you have to have,” said CJTF-76 Task Force Griffin Command Sgt. Maj. Hector Marin as he spoke to a group of Soldiers from Hawaii, Kansas and Texas who will soon deploy into Pakistan for what is predicted to be a three- to six-month deployment.

Transporting four CH-47’s more than halfway around the world was no small feat for Company B, 214th Aviation Regiment, of the 2nd Battalion, 25th Avn. Rgt., based out of Wheeler Army Airfield in Hawaii.

The unit was faced with the daunting task of tearing down components of four CH-47 airframes in a matter of five days. They had to remove the front and rear rotors, the top sections and other major components so the helos could fit into the bellies of three C-5 Galaxies. The group of 60 Soldiers broke up into three smaller elements to move with each aircraft.

Deploying within days of each other, every group left Hickam Air Force Base in a C-5 Galaxy aircraft loaded with gear, supplies, Soldiers and at least one CH-47 airframe.

From Hickam, the C-5 flew direct to Rota Spain — a 17-hour flight with two mid-air refuels. Upon arrival at NAS Rota, Spain, the CH-47’s were transloaded into C-17’s for transport to here.

Brig. Gen. John M. Bednarek, assistant division commander of operations for the 25th Infantry Division (Light) and U.S. Army, Hawaii, was on hand as the last group of Co. B, 214th Avn. Rgt., Soldiers departed the Air Mobility Command terminal at Hickam.

“These Soldiers had only five days to prepare and they had to not only do personal preparation, but also major equipment preparation. It is absolutely incredible what has occurred in the last five days,” Bednarek said.

“You’ve got Soldiers who have been alerted for a humanitarian mission and almost every one of these Soldiers volunteered and asked to go because they and Hawaii seemed to be managing better than their Alaskan counterparts.

“For the Alaskan cadets, this is a lot more challenging,” said Maj. Paul Egli, executive officer of the UH Army ROTC, “because when they left Alaska it was about 20 degrees, and here it’s about 85 degrees.

Nevertheless, the Alaskan cadets took their challenges head on. And as they prepared themselves for the rope bridge — one of the more difficult events in the challenge — the determination in their eyes showed nothing would keep them from reaching their goal — neither heat nor pain was going to stop them.

The objective of the rope bridge was to cross a seven-to-eight-foot deep ravine, about 15 feet across, with full combat gear.

“The cadets must remain on the rope while they across the ravine with full combat load, which consists of a load-bearing vest, kelvar, weapon,” said Elgi. “They can’t fall or get any gear wet because they will lose valuable points for anything that gets wet,” he explained.

All cadets who attended the ROTC Ranger Challenge had been preparing for the event since the beginning of 2005. Long and hard workouts prepared them for what they would face.

Once all had executed the last challenge, judges announced that the University of Hawaii had triumphed for the first time. The Ranger Challenge trophy stays in Hawaii, much to the dismay of Guam and Alaska ROTC cadets.

Cadets from University of Alaska show off their teamwork skills on the rope crossing obstacle during the Task Force Pacific Rim Ranger Challenge competition at Bellows Air Force Station, Oct. 21. The cadets completed the challenge in 2 hours and 42 seconds, which was almost a school record.

SCHOFIELD BARRACKS — Leaders, they come and they go. Whether coming off deployments or changing duty stations, fresh faces arriving and departing units have always been a continual flow within the military. New personnel may be a bonus, but like a new pair of boots, there is always a little polishing needed before Soldiers can shine their brightest. Upon redeploying from Afghanistan in early 2005, the leadership of 3rd Brigade’s 2nd Battalion, 27th Infantry Regiment, faced a unique challenge — replacing and training 90 percent of its chain of command.

“All that remained were me, two first sergeants and a couple of platoon sergeants,” said Command Sgt. Maj. David L. Yates, command sergeant major of 2nd Bn., 27th Inf. Rgt. “Everyone else at the leadership level was new,” he added, so Yates developed a plan.

That plan was designated as Team Leader Development Week. It brought together battalion team and squad leaders, and other selected Soldiers expected to have leadership roles within the 2-27th, for three days of coordinated education and training, Oct. 11-13.

Day one of the training began early at “D” Quad, Oct. 11, with a five-and-one-half mile leadership run, which exposed participants to more discomfort than typically associated with high-impact exercise.

“I’ve never been on a run like that,” said Sgt. Eliot Scott of 2-27th.

According to Scott, Soldiers stopped at different locations on post throughout the run, and learned about the history of Schofield Barracks.

Later in the day, the battalion’s leaders received traditional classroom training and integration counseling, which emphasized the preparation of lower-enlisted Soldiers for combat, explained Yates.

Day two focused on weapons training. Battalion teams and squad leaders first “bore lighted” their respective weapons, which included M-4 rifles, semiautomatic weapons and M-240s.

“Bore lighting” is a common battle drill for infantrymen, where an optic

A team of three 2nd Battalion, 27th Infantry Soldiers clear one of several rooms in a hotel structure during MOUT training, Oct. 13.

system is attached to and aligned with the bore of a weapon to ensure accuracy,” said Yates.

“The laser gets ‘zeroed’ to the weapon, so that who ever picks that weapon up can fire it on target,” he said.

Leaders later participated in day and night iterations of reflexive fire shooting drills at the KR4 rifle range. Reflexive fire or “quick fire” shooting requires Soldiers to quickly engage targets from distances ranging from five to 25 meters with short, controlled bursts.

Soldiers also walked, turned and engaged targets from 25 meters on command. After each Soldier finished shooting, he went downrange to see where he hit the target.

Day three, Soldiers conducted training at the MOUT site. There, team and squad leaders practiced room-clearing procedures, both during the day and at night. A team generally consisted of four Soldiers, and a squad generally consisted of nine to 12 Soldiers, said Yates.

“We have new Soldiers with combat experience from Afghanistan and different parts of Iraq. Guys are coming in from all over the Army with different experiences,” said Yates. “It’s important to get these leaders together to ensure that they are on the same page.”

Several Soldiers considered their MOUT training most valuable.

“This is the stuff we will be doing in Iraq,” said Scott, a veteran of a tour in Iraq.

Sgt. Joshua McComas, who deployed with the 2-27th to Afghanistan, was quick to agree and added, “A leader needs to know that if you get a Soldier from somewhere else within the battalion, that Soldier can fall into your stack and clear a room just like your guys.”

According to McComas, the training gives him — as a leader responsible for other Soldiers — the confidence to trust other Soldiers.

Sgt. Joe Hensley, 2-27th squad leader, also agreed that the MOUT training was more efficient than prior MOUT training.

“This MOUT training is better because it is just all of us NCOs and leaders without the other Soldiers, so you can get right down to work,” said Hensley.

To emphasize the critical nature of the week’s training exercises, Soldiers received praise and advice their final training day from Command Sgt. Maj. Frank M. Leota, 3rd Brigade’s command sergeant major.

“No one is a born leader,” said Leota. “Leading is a developmental process, so it is important that you absorb everything thrown at you and become as proficient as possible.

“As leaders, you must understand that what you do — or fail to do — will positively or negatively affect other people’s lives.”

3rd BSTB gets acquainted with weapons at Marine Corps’ range

As any perusal of the headlines can indicate, no longer are just infantry Soldiers and Marines facing the harsh realities of combat action as the Global War on Terrorism continues, sending Soldiers into harm’s way for a second, third or even fourth time.

Stories abound, in nearly every Military Occupational Specialty in the Army, of someone who has been involved in a fire-fight, in a convoy struck by an improvised explosive device, or in a hair-raising episode they never believed was part of their job description.

With the Soldier’s changing role on the modern battlefield in mind, elements of the 3rd Brigade Special Troops Battalion (BSTB) left Schofield Barracks on an overcast afternoon, Oct.

Each was mentally prepared for two nights of sleeping under the Kaneohe stars to familiarize him or herself with weapons systems some had never touched, let alone fired.

Battle buddy lends more than a helping hand

Spc. Amanda Flemett

The terms “battle buddy” and “Soldiers helping Soldiers” are heard often in the military. But what do they exactly mean?

For two Soldiers of the 536th Maintenance Company (Direct Support), these words have grown to have great significance.

The 536th deployed to Iraq in September 2004. On Nov. 2 at approximately 7:30 pm, three Soldiers — 1st Lt. Tommy Davis, Master Sgt. Joseph Atalig and Sgt. Christopher Kind — were walking through the motor pool when Davis noticed one of the doors of a newly delivered Tricon container was opened.

“This concerned me because it was marked hazardous and explosive,” said Davis, “so we went to secure it.”

As they secured the container, Davis turned his back to Atalig and Kind and that is when the explosion happened.

The blast, from a mortar round, knocked Davis 15 feet ahead on his stomach. Flames immediately engulfed the other two Soldiers. As Davis tried to recover from the shell shock, he rushed to aid his battle buddies, who were crying out for help.

“I just heard them hollering and saw them on fire,” he recalled.

Not worrying about himself, an injured Davis tried to pull the others to safety, inflicting more injuries onto himself. It was at that time, other Soldiers of 536th rushed to the scene.

“Every one of those Soldiers deserves recognition for what they did,” insists Davis. “They came without any regard for their safety or well being.”

Even after the medics arrived, Davis didn’t stop helping Atalig and Kind until Staff Sgt. James Hunt, took the officer aside and said, “Sir, we got it!”

Davis refused treatment until the other two Soldiers were tended to and remembers saying, “I know they were much worse off than me.”

And they did sustain more injuries than Davis. While Davis suffered third degree burns on thirteen percent of his body, both Atalig and Kind suffered third degree burns on more than 40 to 45 percent of their bodies.

Davis’ injuries to his hand and right leg were sustained while trying to douse the flames on his Soldiers’ bodies. All of the men were transported to Germany and then to Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, but the Soldiering or “battle buddy” didn’t end there.

Kind traveled from San Antonio to Hawaii and to Guam. His family had gone back to Guam when the company deployed. He couldn’t drive due to his injuries and was having trouble, it seemed, taking care of personal things. It was during this time that he came to Davis for help.

“Sgt. Kind got hurt on my watch,” Davis said, “and he was having a hard time with his paperwork. He just couldn’t seem to get anywhere.”

Davis knew that Atalig would be able to handle his own issues, and his family being here in Hawaii was a big help, but Kind didn’t have those connections. So, he spoke to Capt. Michael Glotfelty, the 17th Corps Support Battalion Rear Detachment commander, about Kind’s situation, Capt. Glotfelty backed Davis up completely.

Both men then went to talk to Lt. Col James Fly of 524th Corps

Support Battalion.

“My point is ... don’t just say you’re going to take care of your Soldier on paper. Follow through with it,” Davis said.

This is apparently Fly’s belief also, because when Davis and Glotfelty approached the colonel and told him the situation, he agreed to back Davis up 100 percent. He granted Davis permissive temporary duty to help Kind.

Davis used that time to help Kind get back and forth from appointments and helped him get PCS orders to San Antonio. Davis even assisted Kind in finding a home for him and his family, going so far as to help search for good school districts for Kind’s children.

“Whether the Soldier is hurt or mission capable, you have to take care of the Soldier. You start with a Soldier and end with a Soldier; they make the mission happen,” said Davis.

When asked if he felt that Soldiers caring for Soldiers would be the same if the situation were turned around, Davis simply stated, “as a Soldier, the only thing this rank means is that I’ve been in the Army longer than you.”

Davis said it best when he said, “Soldiers are what make the Army. Without them, we have no Army.”

Currently, Kind is in San Antonio. He hopes to reenlist, but doesn’t know to what Military Occupational Specialty at this time. He still has one more surgery on his right ankle and still strives to be a good Soldier.

Davis is awaiting his promotion to captain in November and will take a command position in Division Support Command.

The two men continue to stay in touch at least twice a week. Both believe that the issue of a Soldier helping a Soldier and taking care of your battle buddy still applies to each and every Soldier.

Being a “battle buddy” does not end after leaving a combat zone. For these two men, the term “battle buddy” will always be kept in their hearts.

Asking Davis what he would like to teach Soldiers from his and Kind’s experience, he simply said, “Battle buddy isn’t just a phrase. Anyone, no matter what rank, no matter how small a deed, can do something to be a battle buddy.”

Military Idol is named

American Forces Press Service
News Release

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Five Soldiers vied for the “Military Idol” title Saturday at Fort Gordon, Ga., and when the votes came in, Sgt. William N. Glenn, 258th Military Police Company in Darmstadt, Germany, was named the Army’s first Military Idol.

The show was Webcast live on Army Knowledge Online. The five finalists were Glenn; Staff Sgt. Ron Henry of Fort Eustis, Va.; Spc. Festus Togbeola, Schweinfurt, Germany; Capt. Ron Carden, Fort Knox, Ky.; and Spc. Ron Sianoya, Wurzburg, Germany.

Viewers logged on to www.militaryidols.com to connect and watch the one-time Webcast of the final competition. The winner was announced Sunday; the show is still available on AKO.

Authorized AKO users include active duty or retired Soldiers, Army Reservists and National Guardsmen. Others can get guest accounts if they know the username of an authorized AKO account holder.

Those eligible for guest accounts include other service members, ROTC and military academy cadets, civilian employees of other services and military and Cabinet agencies, contractors and family members of authorized account holders.

The Military Idol contest, an Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation program, was based on Fox network’s “American Idol.” Each finalist won a local contest on one of 36 Army installations, where competitions ranged from one night to eight weeks.

The judges were Jack L. Tilley, retired sergeant major of the Army; Debra Byrd, vocal coach and arranger for “American Idol”; and country music artist Michael Peterson, best known for “I Am a Soldier.”

The idol received $1,000; the runner-up, $500; and the third-place performer, $250.

‘Golden Dragons’ honor past and present

Capt. Matt Nethers
1st Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment

Golden Dragons, past and present, met Oct. 14 to commend noteworthy Soldiers and reflect upon the regiment’s history.

An awards ceremony recognized the achievements of Soldiers during “Grant Stakes,” a squad-level competition named for Medal of Honor recipient Capt. Joseph X. Grant.

The guest speaker, retired Gen. David Bramlett, motivated Soldiers standing in formation with rousing anecdotes and historical comments.

As well, 25th Infantry Division (Light) leaders Maj. Gen. Benjamin R. Mixon and Command Sgt. Maj. Jerry Taylor, and 2nd Brigade’s leaders Col. Stefan Banach and Command Sgt. Maj. Karl Morgan, inspired and congratulated Golden Dragons of today.

Bramlett completed his first tour with 1st Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment and knew Grant personally. They both were lieutenants and company executive officers during their tours in Vietnam from 1966-1967.

Bramlett recalled the night for which Grant received the Medal of Honor. As the Alpha Company Executive Officer and acting commander, then 1st Lt. Grant inspired his men during an intense firefight Nov. 13, 1966. Bramlett told stories of Grant’s personal courage and actions, which saved many souls

Pamphlet updates career management for officers

Army News Service
News Release

WASHINGTON — Department of the Army Pamphlet 600-3, Commissioned Officer Development and Career Management, has been rewritten and was released to the field electronically Oct. 21.

Officers can view the updated pamphlet at http://www.army.mil/usapa/e-pubs/pdf/p600_3.pdf. It has been updated to reflect the latest changes to the Officer Personnel Management System, said Lt. Col. Dennis Harrington of the Army G-1’s Officer Accessions Policy Branch.

For instance, Intermediate Level Education, or ILE, has replaced the Command and General Staff Officer Course, he said.

Additional changes to the pamphlet are expected next year, Harrington said. He expects another DA Pam 600-3 to be released in fall 2006, that should include new career timelines.

The G-1 staff redefined the current pamphlet as a professional development guide for all officers based on specific guidance from Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker.

The pamphlet no longer prescribes a path of assignments or schools that will guarantee success, but rather describes the full spectrum of developmental opportunities an officer can expect throughout a career, Harrington said.

The revised pamphlet emphasizes the requirement for the future force leader to acquire the proper balance of “depth” and “breadth” of experience in challenging leadership positions with a focus on becoming “leader qualified,” he said.

Human Resource Command-Alexandria, in coordination with G-1, has established a task force for the review of the entire Officer Personnel Management System.

Harrington said proposed changes are focused on developing the officer corps to successfully serve in a campaign-quality, joint and expeditionary Army, as well as to synchronize the OPMS with the Army’s battle rhythm.

Force stabilization manning practices will be the cornerstone of a modular future force, and will be outlined in a new publication, currently unnumbered, replacing AR 600-83: The New Manning System – COHORT Unit Replacement System, dated Oct. 27, 1986.

Harrington noted this DA

Pam 600-3 is the first revision since the OPMS XXI study of 1998 and incorporates the results of the Warrent Officer Personnel Management Study XXI of 2000 as well as recommendations from the Army Training and Leader Development panel studies from 2000 to 2004.

OPMS continues to develop officers with priority to Army needs, and then to officer PD and preference, officials said. Development will be based on skills required, today and tomorrow.

Myths cloud the new NSPS

Department of the Army
News Release

In General

MYTH: NSPS does nothing to help with national security.

FACT: Not true. The mission of DoD is national security, and civilians play a vital role in supporting that mission. NSPS provides the Department the tools necessary to recruit, retain, and manage the civilian workforce to accomplish our critical mission in a more effective and efficient manner.

NSPS will also provide flexibilities so we can reduce our reliance on the military to perform jobs that civilians can and should perform, freeing up the military to perform its warfighting duties.

NSPS is a mission-driven, performance-based system that motivates, recognizes and rewards excellence, which will result in an overall improvement to mission effectiveness and enhanced national security — critical in the Global War on Terrorism.

Regarding Benefits

MYTH: I will lose my benefits under NSPS.

FACT: NSPS will not affect rules governing retirement benefits or eligibility, health and life insurance, leave, attendance, and other similar benefits.

MYTH: NSPS eliminates veterans' preference for reduction in force (RIF) and hiring.

FACT: NSPS preserves veterans' preference. DoD is committed to the principles of veterans' preference; under NSPS, veterans continue to receive preference for both hiring and RIF.

MYTH: I will lose my job security and there will be layoffs.

FACT: No jobs will be eliminated because of NSPS. In fact, under NSPS there may be more opportuni-

NSPS Town Halls

All civilian personnel are encouraged to attend an upcoming Town Hall briefing to learn more about this new personnel system:

- Nov. 15, 1-3 p.m., Keyser Auditorium, Tripler Army Medical Center, and/or
- Nov. 16, 1:30-3:30 p.m., Sergeant Smith Theater, Schofield Barracks.

ties for civilians as military positions are converted to civilian. By easing the administrative burden routinely required by the current system, managers will turn to civilians first when assigning vital tasks.

Regarding Pay

MYTH: I will lose pay under NSPS, and I won't get credit for the time I've already spent waiting for my next within grade increase.

FACT: Employees will not lose pay upon conversion to NSPS. Employees will be converted into NSPS at their current salary. In many cases, employees will receive a salary increase equal to the amount they have earned towards their next within grade increase (known as the "WGI buy-in").

MYTH: There will be no locality pay under NSPS.

FACT: The proposed NSPS pay system includes a locality-based component of pay called a "local market supplement" that is paid in addition to an employee's basic pay. The local market supplement will be based on market conditions related to geographical and occupational factors, and may differ from one occupation to another in a given locality area.

Employees will be entitled to increases to the local market supplement, unless they are performing at an unacceptable level.

MYTH: NSPS is just a way to freeze the pay of DoD civilians, since we're no longer entitled to the automatic January pay increase or within-grade increases.

FACT: The annual January pay increase, as we know it now, will change. The proposed pay rules provide for periodic "rate range" adjustments, to adjust the minimum and/or maximum rate of a pay band. When a minimum rate of a pay band is adjusted upward, employees will receive an equivalent increase.

There are no "steps," similar to the GS system, in a pay banding system. Instead, pay increases and/or performance bonuses are based primarily on your performance rating. Unacceptable performers are not eligible for pay increases under the proposed system.

MYTH: Under NSPS, funds for salaries and bonuses will no longer be certain.

FACT: DoD is committed to ensuring civilian compensation is protected. In fact, the law requires that the aggregate amount of money allocated for civilian compensation for organizations under NSPS cannot be less than the amount that would have been allocated under the existing system.

Under NSPS, the overall amount of money that would have been used for the annual January pay adjustment, within grade increases, quality step increases, and similar payments, will be used for civilian pay, and those funds will be protected. However, the proposed NSPS pay system will distribute those funds based primarily on performance.

On Labor-Management Relations

MYTH: Unions have had no involvement in developing NSPS.

FACT: The proposed NSPS regulations are the product of a broad-based, collaborative effort across the Department that began in 2004. This included a number of meetings with employee representatives involving extensive and fruitful discussions on potential options for the design of the system. In several areas, the proposed regulations reflect the interests and concerns that were voiced during those consultation sessions.

We also held numerous focus groups and town hall meetings, many of which included local union involvement, to gather input and feedback on the system design. Now that we have published our proposed regulations, the next step in this process is to gather comments and recommendations on the proposed regulations, and engage in more discussions and dialogue with employee representatives as called for in the law authorizing NSPS.

MYTH: NSPS will do away with bargaining units and employee unions.

FACT: Not true. The implementation of the NSPS labor relations system will not eliminate unions or bargaining units. Employees will still be able to be represented by labor organizations and to bargain collectively. The proposed rules enable the Department to act expeditiously in carrying out its mission by limiting the situations that are subject to bargaining, and speeding up the bargaining process.

Regarding Employee Rights

MYTH: Employees will lose their fundamental rights to grieve or appeal unfair or adverse actions.

FACT: NSPS does not change critical employee rights such as merit systems principles, due process, whistleblower protections, and protection against prohibited discrimination and personnel practices. There will continue to be avenues for employees to seek redress.

For bargaining unit employees, negotiated grievance procedures will remain part of the process, and other employees will continue to have access to administrative grievance procedures and formal appeals processes for adverse actions.

Air Force Space commander addresses APCSS

Mary Markovinovic
Asia-Pacific Center for Security Studies

HONOLULU — “It’s not about space. It’s about us down here, being able to work together.”

That was the message from Gen. Lance W. Lord, commander of U.S. Air Force Space Command today as he spoke to international fellows attending the Asia-Pacific Center for Security Studies.

Lord provided more than 100 fellows from 34 countries a general overview of the U.S. Space program. He spoke of the impact that space operations have on global community, both militarily and economically.

From satellite broadcast to pagers to global positioning, the environment of space is the new “high frontier,” and the U.S. Air Force Space Command serves as its guardian.

Many nations operate in space today or use services based on satellites in space.

“It is important to collaborate with our neighbors,” said Lord.

One of the services the U.S. Space Command provides is the tracking of more than 10,000 objects in space. According to Lord, the command supported the recent Chinese space program by tracking objects during the Chinese craft’s re-entry into earth’s orbit.

Working together is a matter of international security. According to Lord, everyone reserves the right to operate in space. They also have a right to defend against the space environment.

Interoperability and cooperation are important as the global economy grows in its reliance on space capabilities.

U.S. Air Force Space Command is leading the way on the high frontier as it develops new programs such as space radar and recapitalizes existing capabilities.

The Space Command is also looking at ways to make satellites and satellite launches cheaper and also to reduce the amount of time it takes to launch into space from months/weeks to hours/days. Doing so will increase responsiveness to international needs such as the ability to send up a satellite to help gather information and improve communications when dealing with international disasters such as last year’s tsunami.

The APCSS regularly addresses regional and global security issues, inviting military and civilian representatives of the United States and 45 Asia-Pacific nations to its comprehensive program of courses and conferences, both in Hawaii and throughout the Asia-Pacific region.

The Center supports the U.S. Pacific Command’s objective of developing professional and personal ties among national security establishments throughout the region.

APCSS focuses on a multilateral and multidimensional approach to defining and addressing regional security issues and concerns.

He introduced Web sites that included www.army.mil/wellbeing, www.sexualassault.army.mil and <http://mentorship.army.mil>, among others.

“There’s so much to click on ... your wrist may grow tired,” said Dingle, who stressed military families’ needs to serve, live, connect and grow. “There are some great initiatives out there in the field that we’re going to take advantage of in the coming fiscal year.

“We’re going to take more trips out to see what those programs and services are and get the feedback on those programs so that we know how to make them better.”

Dingle said that as of Sept. 29 about 268,000 Soldiers have used the Rest & Recuperation Leave Program, instituted in 2003, only about 10 percent. About 40,000 Soldiers used the program before DoD started paying for flights from Dallas or Atlanta to the airport closest to their homes, but only about 3,500 have sought reimbursement for airfares they purchased out-of-pocket.

“We want those [other] Soldiers to come in,” he said. “We owe them the reimbursement.”

Virtual family readiness groups online

Brig. Gen. John A. Macdonald,

commander of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center (CFSC), outlined how the multicomponent family support network and virtual family readiness groups provide support and information to assist Soldiers and families before, during and after deployments.

Macdonald said surveys indicate that 87 percent of enlisted families have a computer in their home and 93 percent of officers’ homes are computer-equipped, thus explaining the Army’s creation of more and more Web sites to spread the wealth of its programs.

“You can’t expect the industrial age of leaving personal lives at the fence,” he said. “We did that for awhile and we had baby carriers on the bleachers during [physical training]... We’ve gotten smarter than that.

“You can’t hire part of the person. ... And if you don’t pay attention to all of that, the Department of Defense says you don’t retain that skilled, motivated, very functionally capable [Soldier]... We have a group of people that we can’t afford to let go,” explained Macdonald.

Next phase is “Operation Ready”

Macdonald touched on refining Operation Ready, the next phase of Army Family Team Building, Family Readiness Groups, Military One Source and the Web site www.MyArmyLifeToo.com, among other programs provided by CFSC.

Everything discussed in the forum is designed to simplify life for Army families, he said.

“We want to make every Soldier and every family feel that they can do anything that they want to do,” said Brig. Gen. Russell L. Frutiger, U.S. Army Europe’s deputy assistant chief of staff, G-1, adding that the Army views deployment as a family affair. “It’s just a totally new way of doing business.”

ready for what lies ahead of them.

“I’m nervous but very confident in the skills of the team,” said Spc. Jason Marquez, water purification specialist. “Also, I am looking forward to the different things that we’ll have the opportunity to experience while we are over there.”

With motivation high, within a tight-knit group of Soldiers, the governor had one last comment to make in his speech.

“Go with courage and strength,” he said. “Do what needs to be done, knowing that every day we are thinking of you and praying for you.”

When the ceremony ended, Command Sgt. Maj. Walter P. DeJesus, 105th Troop Command, Guam National Guard, gave his final parting comment.

“The time will come when you will return and share your experiences with us,” said DeJesus. “Until then, Godspeed.”

wanted to help; and, be part of something larger than themselves to help someone in absolute need,” Bednarek added.

With the death toll topping 80,000 and climbing daily, it is truly a race against time and harsh winter weather to re-assemble the CH-47’s and deploy them to Quasim Airfield.

Already, Task Force Quake has flown more than 400 sorties and delivered at least 1.2 million pounds of relief aid in the form of food, blankets, and tents. Within a few days, all four of Co. B, 214th Avn. Rgt. CH-47’s will be re-assembled and in Pakistan — adding to the relief effort for the earthquake-stricken area.

For many of the Soldiers, this mission is one that they truly believe in. Sgt. Noel Rao of Co. B, 214th Avn. Rgt., took a break from re-assembling tail number 300 and had this to say, “I love what I do, and I love what we stand for. It feels good to be a part of it all.”

Ready for deployment

In order to be prepared for their Operation Iraqi Freedom deployment, Soldiers from 909th Quartermaster Detachment (ROWPU) recently conducted a convoy escort exercise that involved reacting to an improvised explosive device and a small arms attack. The exercise also incorporated a medical evacuation helicopter. The Guam National Guard unit held their deployment ceremony on Schofield Barracks, Oct. 25.

the easy-to-operate reconnaissance and surveillance MAV, followed by a demonstration from Pvt. Mitchell Brown, an MAV operator in the battalion.

Looking over Brown’s shoulder and into the sky, Sullivan watched as he controlled the MAV above the MOUT site with a remote control.

The purpose of the MAV system is to give real-time combat information to small units, which is especially helpful in urban terrain where the enemy has more opportunities to hide.

Sullivan and Spencer then walked down to a building inside the MOUT site and observed Soldiers from 2nd Bn., 27th Inf. Rgt., enter and clear its rooms.

Wearing interceptor body armor, goggles and a Kevlar helmet, Sullivan viewed the blank and live-fire training up close, alongside the Soldiers.

Ten minutes later, all of the Soldiers gathered at the bottom of a small mound as Sullivan addressed them.

“What you remind me of today is the very simple fact — wars are not won by stuff. The stuff is great, but the fact of the matter is, it takes competent, confident, tough, courageous Soldiers to go into these buildings and do what you do,” Sullivan said.

'Virtual Commissary' opens doors

Bonnie Powell

Army News Service

FORT LEE, Va. — Commissary shoppers looking for a different kind of gift for friends or family at home or abroad can let their "fingers do the clicking" at the new Virtual Commissary.

Located under the shopping link at <http://www.commissaries.com>, Virtual Commissary will open up a whole new world of Internet shopping for authorized users of the commissary benefit.

"We're excited about DeCA's first adventure into the world of Internet shopping," said Patrick B. Nixon, chief executive officer and acting director for the Defense Commissary Agency.

Initially, one of DeCA's business partners, Kraft Foods, Inc., is kicking off Internet shopping with a selection of gift baskets.

"But the number of vendors and manufacturers participating will continue to increase, along with the variety of products," Nixon said.

All of the products in the gift baskets at Virtual Commissary can be found on the shelves of "brick and mortar" commissaries, but the unique packaging of products into gift and special occasion baskets adds a new twist. With titles like "Camouflage," "Drill Sergeant" and "Touch of Home," the baskets offer assortments of crackers, canned cheeses, cookies, candies and even beverages and coffee packs.

Secure portal for safe access

To access the extended commissary, shoppers must pass through a secure portal found under the shopping link at www.commissaries.com. Personal information entered by the customer is validated to ensure they are an authorized shopper. Access is dependent on whether the customer is entered in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS). Military exchanges use a similar method to check for authorization before permitting access to exchange Web sites or online shopping.

DoD civilians stationed overseas who are otherwise authorized to shop at commissaries may not be able to access Virtual Commissary until changes are made to the DEERS database by the Defense Manpower Data Center, said DeCA officials. DMDC is targeting completion of the changes for late November.

Virtual Commissary customers can make selections and fill in their payment and shipping information in one easy and secure step, before being transferred to the manufacturer's site where they can get total cost for the product (including the shipping) and finalize their purchase.

The customer pays shipping and handling charges, just as at most other Internet shopping sites, and charges will vary depending on the method of shipping selected, the location and the speed of delivery requested.

Customers can check for availability of delivery to APO and FPO addresses as well as get more information on what's in the gift baskets by clicking on the image of the gift basket at Virtual Commissary.

Payment for orders can be made with any credit card accepted in "real" commissaries, and customer information is not archived by DeCA.

tol, M-249 squad automatic weapon, and MK-19 grenade launcher training, in order to familiarize Soldiers assigned to the 3rd BSTB. A secondary purpose was to build unit cohesion in a battalion that was formed from elements of disparate units, Aug. 15.

“[I liked] how the MPs [military police] were integrated into our training,” said Pvt. Monica Hernandez of Company B. “We learned a lot from them.”

While firing didn’t begin until Oct. 12, training got underway immediately.

When the sun set, MPs from Headquarters and Headquarters Company and Military Intelligence Soldiers of Co. B erected shelters.

After the evening chow was churning in their stomachs, squads began training in movement, breaking contact and practicing nine-line medical evacuations, which could be heard echoing through the volcanic crater in the moonlit night of Kaneohe Bay.

When the first night’s training was complete, guards assured security and safety, while Soldiers were lulled to sleep by the surf crashing below the K-Bay Range Training Facility.

After watching the sun rise over the bay, Soldiers fired the M-249 and M-9, and then, after a quick lunch, most assembled to fire the MK-19.

Primary marksmanship instructor and MP Sgt. Andrew Scott thoroughly prepared them to shoot. Also, battalion commander Lt. Col. Bryan P. Truesdell joined the training — for the education, fun and motivation, he said — sitting down at an MK-19 and firing a drum of 40mm rounds at a distant hillside.

Long after the sun went down and a half-moon lighted the crater, training was still underway with Soldiers honing their MOS-related skills.

At dawn on day three, anticipation was high. Soldiers would be conducting squad movements (up and down a nearby hill) and fireman carries, and reacting to indirect fire, only to arrive, hearts pounding and out of breath, at a line of M-249s and M-9s.

Hands trembling with exhaustion, Soldiers loaded their weapons and successfully engaged their targets. When they had completed shooting, training was still far from over. Several squads gathered in the bivouac area to conduct an impromptu class in combatives. Soldiers squared off against one another — cheered on by their peers and leaders alike — to choke out their opponents.

After combatives, Soldiers moved on to the MK-19 range to again fire their weapon of choice. However, as the sun waned, the busses pulled up, and the Soldiers fell wearily into their seats, now eager to return home.

Overall, the K-Bay range training provided 3rd BSTB Soldiers exposure to a variety of weapons systems they may be required to fire in combat. Especially for young Soldiers, the training was well-received.

Pfc. Jane Lee, Co. B, 3rd BSTB, said that firing the M-249 and MK-19 helped her prepare for upcoming deployments “because there’s lots of situations where I might be put on that weapon [and] I got to load it and get a feel for the weapon.”

Pfc. Christopher Stokes, also from Co. B echoed similar sentiment, “[Now,] in case there’s ever a problem, I can hop up in the MK-19 or something like that.”

The 3rd BSTB continues to develop as a team with esprit de corps. Cross training amongst companies is creating a more flexible and lethal supplement to the Brigade Combat Team such that the Soldiers and leaders of the 3rd Brigade Special Troops Battalion are truly “On Point” to fight the global war against those who threaten our way of life.

1st Sgt. George Bianco, Jr.

Spc. Cynthia Archibald and Pvt.2 Monica Hernandez conduct combatives training at Marine Corps Base Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay. Their unit, 3rd Brigade Special Troops Battalion, also provided weapons familiarization training for Soldiers at K-Bay’s Range Training Facility.

Memorial funds rise

The 25th Infantry Division Association, a 56-year-old non-profit veterans organization, is the prime sponsor of the 25th Infantry Division War Memorial, adjacent Fernandez Hall at Schofield Barracks.

To date, the Association has raised more than $107,110 of $450,000 toward the cost of the memorial.

Contributions are accepted from the community at large at 25th Infantry Division Association, P.O. Box 7, Flourtown, PA 19031-0007.

All can help to end Domestic Violence

Each year in October, the U.S. Army joins other Department of Defense agencies and the civilian community in observing Domestic Violence Prevention Month, to reaffirm and renew its total commitment to promoting a safe and healthy environment for all families.

The Army's theme for this year's celebration is "Stand Up and Speak Out Against Domestic Violence." Increasing the public's understanding about domestic violence can help communities support survivors and their families, as well as individuals and agencies that provide intervention and prevention services throughout the year.

The awareness month is a time to encourage the public to take active steps to prevent domestic violence. The hope is that intensified awareness efforts combined with an ongoing, broad spectrum of prevention work will bring communities closer to ending domestic violence.

The time is now for community members to stand up and speak out to say the violence must stop.

Research indicates that 30 percent of Americans say they know a woman who has been physically abused by her husband or boyfriend in the past year. Further, the Army has consistently shown the highest rates of domestic violence of all the services.

The victim of domestic violence in the military is predominately the female, civilian spouse of active duty personnel. Victims normally have children and have been married two years or less.

In a 2002 research study sampling active duty females, 29.9 percent reported lifetime intimate partner violence, defined as physical and/or sexual assault from a current or former partner.

Men in our community play an important role in our nation's efforts to stop violence against women. All men have the opportunity to serve as role models and mentors for other men and boys regarding the proper treatment of women and girls. All children need to be taught at a young age that using violence is wrong and will not be tolerated.

Men are in a unique position to communicate this message in a strong, compassionate and meaningful way. Working in partnership, men and women together can make enormous strides toward changing attitudes and perceptions around domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

Education and awareness is crucial to changing attitudes and perceptions and to ending the daily occurrence of domestic violence. The Army Family Advocacy Program (FAP) and its parent organization, Army Community Service (ACS), stand ready to provide preventive resources in the areas of enhancing family relationships and educating new spouses on the military lifestyle, financial management, improving job skills, and facilitating support groups.

For families who are at risk or in abusive relationships, chaplains, FAP Social Work Services, Marriage and Family Therapy Center, and Mental Health services are committed to providing timely professional care.

U.S. Army Hawaii's Victim

COMMENTARY

Dee Athey

Advocacy Program provides comprehensive assistance to victims of spouse abuse and to active duty victims of sexual assault. Installation victim advocates provide immediate and ongoing information and referrals to a variety of military and civilian resources, to include referrals for counseling, legal services, and safe shelter for victims of Domestic Violence.

Advocates support Schofield Barracks and Fort Shafter Military Police with victim advocacy 24 hours a day, seven days a week. They provide immediate assistance to Soldiers and spouses who are in crisis due to a domestic incident, and to assist active duty victims of sexual assault.

Domestic violence hurts everyone. We may not be able to totally eradicate domestic violence, but we can help improve the quality of life for families by changing our attitudes towards domestic abuse, availing ourselves of community resources, and encouraging others to access these resources.

The community that seriously expects to eliminate this vicious problem and break the cycle of violence must take an active stance against domestic violence.

For more information about how you can stand up and speak out against domestic violence, the ACS FAP can be reached at 655-2400 (655-4ACS) for information.

If you or someone you know is in an unsafe relationship, call a victim advocate at 624-SAFE (624-7233).

(Editor's Note: Dee Athey, an advocate for the Army Family Advocacy Program.)

Soldiers do not put up with domestic violence.

Take action and report.

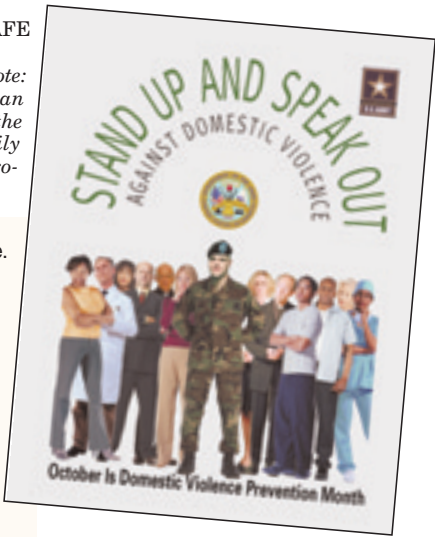

Accept no excuses.

Never ignore the signs of abuse.

Develop a strong community response.

Uphold the rights of victims.

Participate in prevention; do not be a bystander.

Making a difference

3rd Brigade lends some helping hands

Sgt. Maurice Smith
3rd Brigade Public Affairs

Soldiers in the Army are known for making a difference 365 days out of the year. From training, to fighting, protecting, volunteering or providing relief efforts, troops are pitching in to make some type of change whenever and wherever they go. However, Saturday was a special day focused toward doing what the military does so well, which is to lend a helping hand.

Spc. Matthew Comley provides stability on the stage by drilling nails into the plywood.

The fourth Saturday of every October is Make A Difference Day. This day is dedicated to volunteering and helping others, neighbors helping neighbors. For this year's celebration, 3rd Brigade and others helped out their neighbors in the local community.

Unfortunately, Saturday was filled with rain, so the unit had to reschedule the painting for the next day. Although they had to reschedule that particular volunteer effort, they were still able to help others on different projects. The Soldiers built a wheelchair ramp adjacent to one of the sidewalks at Mililani High School, and painted the seven-inch guns displayed at Fort Derussy. "It's just an opportunity to

"We are with one school, Ka'ala Elementary. They needed a parking lot striped, so we are going to do that for them," said Capt. Andy Taylor, chaplain of 2nd Battalion 5th Infantry Regiment.

The Soldiers built a wheelchair ramp adjacent to one of the sidewalks at Mililani High School, and painted the seven-inch guns displayed at Fort Derussy.

enhance community relations between the military and community organizations," Taylor said.

Maj. Erik Schourek, executive officer for 2nd Bn., 35th Inf. Rgt., also felt the same way.

"I think it's really important for the guys to give some time back to the community because the community supports us in our endeavors," Schourek said.

Schourek and Soldiers from 2-35 also got in the mix for Make A Difference Day. They strengthened and refinished a stage floor for the Kipapa Elementary School in Mililani. The stage floor is used for plays, graduations and award ceremonies at the school, and it was in pretty bad shape according to Sherry Yamaza, Vice Principle.

"The floor is pretty much worn down. It's pretty old," Yamaza said. "We asked Maj. Schourek and his men if they could come in and redo the floor stage by putting a new floor board on it, screw it on, and basically put a new board over the old one, and tile it," she said.

The unit used the school's partnership fund to buy supplies and tools needed for the project. More than 40 Soldiers from different companies within 2-35 volunteered to help out in this task.

Having a volunteer turnout this successful really shows the true nature of 3rd Brigade's troops and the strong relationship that the community and Soldiers have built with one another here, according to Taylor and Schourek.

"This is strictly volunteer," Schourek emphasized to point out the community relationship.

"I know that last year this school did a little farewell skit for the battalion, and remained in contact with the battalion while they were deployed to Afghanistan. And then they did a welcome presentation upon our return, which included dinner for Soldiers, so this is our time to give back to them for their support," he said.

"Our Soldiers have given so much. Most of them have deployed or redeployed," Taylor said.

"It just goes to show you the nature of most of the people in the Army. Even though they've already given so much, they are still willing to give more. To me, it just shows the fiber of their character. It just shows the desire that they have to help and be a part of something this good," he said.

The community and the schools were very excited to have service members volunteer their time to help and save money. Some of the projects cost thousands of dollars to hire contractors to do the job, but Soldiers completed these tasks for next to nothing money-wise.

"I believe they saved us about $5,000. It cost us almost nothing at all. The only thing we paid for was the pizza for their lunch, but that's no cost at all because we are glad to do it," said Yamaza.

"The teachers were so happy," she said. "I told them that we are going to have a new floor and they got so excited."

Trick or Treat, is there anything still good to eat?

Honoring tiny angels

Families to remember infants lost too soon

By MAJ Darlene Julkowski, RN, MS,
OB-GYN Nurse Educator
& Perinatal Bereavement Counselor

Angela and Staff Sgt. Paul Rogers were overjoyed to be expecting their third child.

Angela had gone in for an ultrasound after one performed a couple weeks earlier showed her baby wasn't as big as expected. She was in complete shock when she learned that there was no heartbeat and that the baby had died.

"It was so hard to snap out of that mode of expecting a baby. I still found myself looking at baby names and wanting to plan for this baby even after he was gone," she explained.

Pregnant with their first child, Katrina and Sgt. Scott Davis were thrilled to start planning for the arrival of their baby. Then during pregnancy or in the first months of life.

Miscarriages, ectopic pregnancies, stillbirths and infant deaths are misunderstood events. Not everyone understands the emotional investment parents put into their unborn children.

The loss of a baby, no matter how small, is tragic. Hopes, dreams and plans are lost, and the loss can be overwhelming for parents.

Katrina talked about having "nightmares" and reliving the experience over and over so vividly. She is trying to get over it, but "it hurts too much to talk about."

Like most people who have experienced an infant loss, she has learned that people can say such insensitive things.

"Sometimes it's better for them to say nothing because it's more painful to hear people say, 'At least your baby is in heaven now' or 'When are you going to get pregnant again?'"

Angela found that what helped her family cope with the loss of their baby was the tremendous support she received from friends and church. Just getting hugs and hearing "I'm sorry" from others truly helped.

"What was most hurtful was when friends would ignore me," Angela said.

She understands now that people sometimes just don't know what to say, and it may seem easier to avoid the topic. She encourages others who know someone who has experienced an infant loss to simply be there and let couples know you care, instead of ignoring their loss as though it will go away faster that way.

The grief never completely goes away.

"A Time To Remember" Candlelight Ceremony

A Candlelight Memorial Service, sponsored by volunteers from Tripler, Queen's, and Kaiser hospitals, will be held to both celebrate and mourn the short lives of babies lost too soon. The public is invited to attend the service and light a candle in honor of a baby's memory.

Immediately following the ceremony, all are welcome to join in fellowship on the chapel lanai.

Bennett now offers military after-school support

HELEMANO MILITARY RESERVATION -- Being a military or civilian-working parent, jobs tend to interfere with the needs of children when it comes to being picked up and looked after during work hours.

The Bennett Youth Center here is a proud supporter of the "Lights On After School" program, held last week.

"We offer a structured program for children with interaction with adults that are going to be a mentor and a positive role model," said Jessica Ferbeyre, assistant director of the youth center. "We truly offer them the opportunity to grow outside of school in more of a social setting."

The Lights On After School program began in October 2000 with more than 1,200 events across the nation. Last year, more than half a million people came together at 7,000 events to show their support for after-school programs.

The program is a nonprofit public awareness and advocacy organization supported by a group of public, private and nonprofit entities to ensure that all children have access to after-school programs by 2010.

Youth centers on military installations across the nation and around the world host this event to inform children and their parents about the academic and enrichment activities they offer.

"I like dancing, doing karaoke and painting," said Alysha Hanevold, a child who attends the youth center.

Aside from painting, dancing and karaoke, the center also offers activities such as photography, technology, sewing and cooking classes, basically almost anything a child could be interested in.

The program also helps children with homework and any other things they might need help with in school.

"Instead of children having to go home by themselves [to] play video games, watch television or maybe play outside," Ferbeyre explained, "they can come here and are able to interact with children their own age, as well as adults."

The program was originally designed to help keep children in a safe and constructive environment during their time out of school.

"I like it because it's a lot better than going home and watching television because I have activities to do," Hanevold explained.

"Children aren't going home alone, bottom line," Ferbeyre emphasized. "They can come here and be involved in different programs that we offer, and help them grow into becoming their own person."

Local scouts cook, knot and talk story in Mililani

Scouts and leaders from Troops 76, 144, 176 and 264 staged a successful Troop Fair at the Mililani Town Center, Oct. 22.

Webelos Scouts, younger Cub Scouts and interested youth from the surrounding community stopped by to talk to scouts and leaders who attended, many of whom are military children of Soldiers stationed at Schofield Barracks and Wheeler Army Air Field.

Troop 144 ran a knot-tying activity, teaching participants how to tie knots using Twizzlers candy. Also, each troop set up displays and participated in the Outdoor Cooking Contest.

State Representative Jon Riki Karamatsu, an Eagle Scout who earned his rank in Troop 75 in the Ka'ala District; Steve Lim, the Ka'ala District chairperson; and Elizabeth Baldwin, Ka'ala District's district executive judged the Outdoor Cooking Contest. Troop 176 won with its "Soda Can Chicken" entry, which was served with corn-on-the-cob, baked potatoes and garlic toast.

Boys interested in joining a local scouting program can contact Elizabeth Baldwin at 595-6366, ext. 228.

How to help

Do realize the loss is real, and the grief and healing process will be painful and take time.

Do offer a hug or loving gesture.

Do send a card or flowers.

Do attend the memorial service or help arrange one.

Do call.

Do remember the anniversary date with cards and/or flowers, (Parents never forget.)

Do say: "I am sorry about your loss," "I know this is a hard time for you," "Can I bring dinner over?" "I am here if you want to talk about it," or other appropriate comments.

What not to do

Do not ignore the loss.

Do not change the subject; be a friend and listen.

Do not forget the husband's grief ; he lost his child too.

Do not say: (Anything that starts with) "At least," "It was for the best," "Perhaps, it was a blessing in disguise," "It was God's will," "It must have been deformed or abnormal," "Forget it; put it behind you," "At least you didn't have a chance to get to know the baby," "Better now than later," "You can always have another baby," or "You'll get over it."

Since every life is special, every life should be remembered ... even the smallest life.

Corps of Engineers assists students 'monitoring' water

Story and Photos by Dino Buchanan
Honolulu Engineer District

HONOLULU — Seventy-three Honolulu-area middle school students created a snapshot of the water quality in Makiki Stream when they participated in sampling and assessment of the Makiki watershed as part of World Monitoring Day 2005, Oct. 21.

Students listened attentively as Honolulu District and state environmental experts explained the ahupua'a concept and the Ala Wai Canal phytoremediation project.

Their science teachers, Debbie Jensen from Washington Middle School and Lorine Pelletier and Anne Staggemeier from Our Redeemer Lutheran School, collaborated with event hosts the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the State of Hawaii Department of Health Clean Water Branch, the City and County of Honolulu's Department of Environmental Services, the Hawaii Nature Center and the State of Hawaii Department of Land and Natural Resource Division of Aquatic Resources to hold the event.

Forty-eight students from Washington M.S. and 25 from Our Redeemer Lutheran School began the day at Puu Ualakaa State Park on Round Top Drive in Honolulu. Once there, Ramsay Taum from the Hawaii Nature Center talked about the ahupua'a concept and the responsibilities of each student to appreciate the beauty and balances of nature in Hawaii.

Students then traveled downslope to Makiki Stream, adjacent to the Honolulu Board of Water Supply pumping station, to sample stream water for turbidity, temperature, dissolved oxygen and pH balance. Iwalani Sato and Randall Wakumoto, of the city's Environmental Services; Scott Murakawa, of the state's Clean Water Branch; and Michael Wong and Garland Ireland, with the Corps of Engineers, mentored students and provided guidance on the proper use of sampling kits.

"These students were really engaged and interested in the sampling," Ireland said. "I was impressed by their attention to detail and curiosity about the water quality at Makiki."

"After testing the water, many of the students were really interested in what would make the water cleaner," said Sato. "They wanted to know what they could do to make difference — how to clean up the stream beds and get rid of invasive plants that could harm the water."

Students from Honolulu's Washington Middle School check the pH level of water sampled from the Makiki Stream during World Water Monitoring Day 2005.

Later in the day, students met with Chad Durkin, a project manager with Natural Systems, Inc., who is currently working on the Ala Wai Canal phytoremediation project in Honolulu. At one of the project sites near Kapahulu and Ala Wai Avenues, Durkin told students about recent water samples and fish identification taken at the site, as well as the importance of the project to the health of the Ala Wai Watershed ecosystem.

"The hands-on water sampling and on-site briefs provided by the Corps and local environmental officials gives my students a keen awareness that this monitoring impacts the quality of the watershed, and what they do in their backyard affects everyone down to the ocean and beyond," said Jensen.

Michael Wong (background right with hat), hydraulic engineer, Civil Works Technical Branch, Honolulu Engineer District, and Iwalani Sato (background, far right), City and County of Honolulu Department of Environmental Services, describe the use of a water monitoring sample kit to students from Washington Middle School and Our Redeemer Lutheran School at Puu Ualakaa State Park.

"This was a fun and safe field investigation and a lift-off point to taking action in a water quality improvement project," said Sato. "We [event organizers] recognize and applaud our local schools' dedication and commitment to improve the Makiki and Ala Wai Watersheds through hands-on education."

"The most visible sign of event success are the students who are confident and empowered with valuable skills including data collection, critical thinking and action-taking," Sato added.

World Water Monitoring Day was initiated by America's Clean Water Foundation (ACWF) in 2002 as a significant part of the events held in observance of the 30th anniversary of the U.S. Clean Water Act. It serves as a global educational platform for watershed leaders, educators and trained volunteers to help those with little or no experience better understand how the actions of individuals in a watershed can impact many others.

According to ACWF, last year more than 6,527 monitoring sites were registered across the world in 50 countries. Data collected by students is uploaded into usable global databases at <http://www.worldwatermonitoringday.org/>.

NFL to assist military children in college prep testing

eKnowledge LLC
News Release

LOS ANGELES - In association with The Department of Defense (DoD), eKnowledge LLC announces that a group of NFL, NFL Europe, AFL and CFL football players all represented through the Victory Sports Group Agency, has sponsored several million dollars worth of $199 SAT and ACT test prep programs to every family in the U.S. military, all branches—active or retired, for the school year 2005-2006.

Specifically, the sponsorship allows any military personnel to request as many programs as they need for the students in their lives. For example, an uncle can use his military status to order a program(s) for the students in his extended family back home. Any military person can order a program to help a student in his or her life.

To have access to the sponsorship the person placing the order must be active or retired military. The Department of Defense has created a secure website to quickly confirm a person's military status. Personnel can access the confirmation and order pages through several military related associations and organizations, including: The Department of Defense MilitaryStudent.org and Military HOMEFRONT websites for families, The Military Child Education Collation, The Military Impacted Schools' Association, and The National Military Families Association. All have access to confirm military status and process orders.

The sponsorship covers the regular purchase price of $199 and the family pays only the shipping and handling fees of $9.95. Programs have a one-year license and are intended for the sole individual use of students on their personal home or laptop computer and not intended for group or classroom instruction through the schools. Requests to receive the sponsored program can be placed now on the website or over the phone. Programs ship to domestic U.S. addresses and APO addresses.

The SAT/ACT test prep training programs each have two CD-ROMs, that include more than ten (10) hours of training video and require approximately 40 hours of student participation. It can be used as a stand-alone complete course or as a supplement to other SAT/ACT prep materials. The students select the training they most need and can study at their own pace by picking which of the 120 video lessons they want to view. The program also provides progress tracking and much more.

Military personnel must visit one of the websites to verify military status through the secure Department of Defense main Database. That website then forwards the person to the sponsorship order page where they request the programs. To view a flyer that has been made to assist in the effort, please go to:

The Victory Sports Group represents NFL, NFL Europe, AFL, and CFL football players. It is the sports agency section of the Enslens, Pinkston and Courtney, LLP law firm—an international, full-service sports agency/firm. Some of the football players that have contributed to this effort are: Ahmaad Galloway, Scott Young, Garrick Jones, Corey Williams, Jon Bradley, Jason Radar, Dominique Dunbar, Bradly Chavez, Kelly Johnson, Elgin Hicks, Kevin Breedlove, Tim Blackwell.

eKnowledge LLC provides online and CD-ROM e-learning products and services. The company specializes in the custom design of interactive programs utilizing rich media.

Please contact: Brandon Chatham - bchatham@eknowledge.com - 951-256-4076 for questions about this program.

Army makes a difference in COMMUNITY

Spc. Amanda Flemett

Saturday morning, when most people were sleeping in, hundreds of Soldiers woke up early to go to work —not for military training or the call of duty, but for the sole purpose to make a difference in their local community.

Soldiers chose to volunteer time, effort and expertise such as cleaning, painting, landscaping, building and other acts of kindness to make a change in other people's lives.

"It's just part of my job," said Sgt. Danielle Singley, of 125th Finance Battalion. "It's what I do. I volunteer a lot, besides on Make a Difference Day."

Singley, and others of the 125th Finance volunteered to help at a homeless shelter downtown Honolulu. The Finance battalion arrived at 9 a.m. and began sorting clothes, then dusting and cleaning fixtures. They finished by serving hot meals to the homeless.

"It makes you appreciate what you got; I enjoy it," said Singley. B Battery, 2nd Battalion, 11th Field Artillery, under the command of Capt. Frank M. Buchheit, spent its day helping World War II veteran Seikatsu "John" Kikuyama, suffering from Parkinson's disease. Buchheit and his Soldiers spent the day cleaning the veteran's yard, building new cabinets for his home and erecting a wheelchair ramp at his front door.

"He's done a lot for this country; I believe us taking the day off to come out here and help him is a great honor and an inspiration," said Sgt. William Toledo.

Toledo went on to explain why helping was important. "He's been through a lot of things that we might be going through in these wars that are happening. It's something to do and I'm proud to do it."

Spc. Michael D. Williams said he enjoys just helping out when asked why he got up so early to contribute yard work.

Buchheit boasted about his Soldiers saying, "These guys are really committed to coming out and volunteering. That's a big joy for me as a commander to see the passion these guys have for helping out."

Make a Difference Day was first instituted in 1992 by USA Weekend magazine and co-sponsored by the Daily Tribune, in conjunction with the Points of Light Foundation. Each year 10 outstanding community efforts are selected and organizers are awarded $10,000.

Since its beginnings, millions have joined in to do something for their community or neighbors, just to help one person who may be having troubles.

"Every little bit counts," said Capt. LaGlenda Hudson of 125th Finance. "The news sometimes puts a shadow of only negative things [that the Army does]; we do come out and do positive things, and this is one of the things we do."

"Soldiers are here to help," Hudson added.
