eral benefits
The 2007 edition of Federal benefits for Veterans dependents is available on-line and as a series of Web pages at va.gov/opa/vadocs/va_benefits.asp. The site provides the rates for certain federal pay and outlines many programs and services provided by VA and other agencies. It also features toll-free phone numbers, Internet addresses and a directory of facilities throughout the country.

ility Benefits
The Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense began a pilot program to test a new disability evaluation system for wounded warriors at the three military medical facilities in the Washington area. This initiative is designed to eliminate duplicative and confusing elements of the disability program of the two departments. The pilot includes non-clinical care and administrative activities, such as case management, counseling requirements associated with disability case processing and the service member's referral to a Military Department Medical Attention Board to VA's Pension and Beneficiary program.

STUMPNECK NAVY ANNEX, INDIAN HEAD, Md. - Different military occupational specialties create a diverse Marine Corps with an array of responsibilities. The Marines with Chemical Biological Incident Response Force, II Marine Expeditionary Force, get their military occupational specialty training by completing the CBIRF Basic Course here to fill an important role as emergency workers.

The course arms CBIRF Marines with skills to respond to a real-world chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear or high-yield explosive events while giving Marines the capability to save lives in those environments.

"CBIRF is a rescue unit," said Duane Burrige, a CBC instructor. "We just do it in a contaminated environment."

CBIRF moved from Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune, N.C., in 1996 to the nation's capital region where it has more than 11 years of operational history including the October 2001 anthrax and February 2004 ricin attacks at Capitol Hill.

Throughout the years, the CBC curriculum has evolved from a one-day class to two weeks packed with instruction on subjects ranging from hazardous material operations to Federal Emergency Management Agency search techniques. The CBC staff enhanced the training with technical rescue skills, life-saving techniques and chemical, biological and radiological decontamination.

"The first CBC was eight hours," Burrige said. "It consisted of an introduction to (personal protective equipment), respiratory protection, conceptive operations and practical applications."

The CBC schoolhouse took time to develop, and eventually became a diamond in the rough as a building filled with amenities surrounded by a collapsed structure used to train.

"When we took over the facility from the base, it had one electrical outlet," said Burrige. "Between the civilian instructors and the Marines, we started spending more time out here building the place up. Our first annual budget was $3,000 and everything else we got by hook or by crook."

After 11 years of work, the CBC schoolhouse is home to some useful equipment, such as a collapsed-structure trainer. Here Marines perform their CBC final practical application.

Instructors give the Marines simulated scenarios such as extracting government officials from a terrorist-bombed embassy. The

Bush urges Congress to approve funds for troops in combat

Carmen L. Gleason
American Forces Press Service

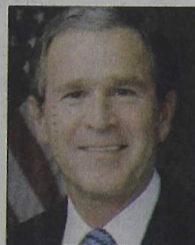

WASHINGTON - President George W. Bush said Congress must act quickly to approve a bill to fund troops fighting in the war on terrorism.

"Congress' first priority should be to provide the funds and flexibility to keep our troops safe and help them protect our nation," Bush said during his weekly radio address.

The President said he has submitted detailed requests to fund operations in the War on Terrorism beginning in February, and he noted troops have been waiting on the needed funds for months. He urged members of Congress to approve the funds before they break for the holidays.

"The funds include money to carry out combat operations against the enemy in Afghanistan and Iraq," Bush said. "They include money to train the Afghan and Iraqi security forces to take on more responsibility for the defense of their countries. And they include money for intelligence operations to protect our troops on the battlefield."

Congress has approved supplemental funding for war operations, but such legislation comes attached with timetables for the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Iraq. Bush has vowed to veto any such legislation that

Following a Pentagon visit this week, the president told reporters the department's missions were too important to be disrupted, delayed or put at risk.

Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates and other senior defense officials warned the commander in chief that anticipated funding shortfalls have resulted in the preparation for the Army and Marine Corps to reduce operations at all bases during the first few months of 2008.

"[Gates] has already notified Congress he will transfer money from accounts used to fund other activities of the military services to pay for current

Scholarships for military children program begins

Defense Commissary Agencies' 2008 Scholarships for Military Children program kicked off Nov. 1. Applications, available at commissaries worldwide and online at Military Scholar must be turned in to a commissary by close of business Feb. 20, 2008.

Applicants must submit an essay arguing for or against the following statement: "Every able-bodied citizen should be required to serve a two-year period of time in the military. Why or why not?" The program is open to unmarried children under the age of 21 (23 if enrolled in school) of military active-duty, Reserve, Guard and retired personnel. Eligibility will be determined using the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System database.

Applicants should ensure they, as well as their sponsor, are enrolled in the DEERS database. Applicants must have a current ID card. Applicants must be attending, or already attending, an accredited college or university full-time in the fall of 2008, or enrolled in a program of studies expected to transfer directly into a four-year program. The program has awarded 3,532 scholarships worth more than $5.5 million dollars to children of military families since it began in 2001. ■

Don't be a victim this holiday season ... prevent impaired driving

Motorists are facing an epidemic of death on our roadways, and tragically many of the fatalities and serious injuries could have been prevented. It is estimated more than 40 percent of all fatalities occurring on our nation's roads are caused by alcohol-impaired drivers. More than 17,000 people are killed annually with tens of thousands of serious and disabling injuries occurring. According to the Naval Safety Center, the Marine Corps alone lost 63 personnel in motor vehicle accidents in FY07, 37 Marines were killed in PMV collisions, three in GMV collisions, 19 on motorcycles, and four pedestrian and bicycle collisions. The fact is, too many lives are lost each year to a tragedy that can be avoided. This trend is unacceptable and must be corrected. See the following information to assist you.

• If you are drinking, do not drive. If you plan to drink, design-nate a non-drinking driver.

• Support the strengthening and vigorous enforcement of impaired-driving laws.

• Young drivers are at particular risk of being involved in alcohol-related crashes. Remember, if you're under 21; strictly follow the zero tolerance alcohol policy as required by MCO and state laws.

• Your best defense against a drunk driver is wearing your safety belt; ensure it's always used.

• Volunteer to be a designated driver and don't hesitate to encourage others to volunteer.

• Never condone or approve of excessive alcohol consumption. Intoxicated behavior is deadly!

• Don't ever let your friends drive drunk. Take their keys; have them spend the night; have them ride home with someone else; call a cab; or do whatever else is necessary - but don't let them drive!

If you are impaired, call a taxi, use mass transit, or get a sober friend or family member to drive you.

• When driving, avoid use of medications that may impair your judgment and awareness.

• Remember - Friends Don't Let Friends Drive Impaired. Take their keys and never let a friend leave your sight if you think they are about to drive while impaired.

Commanders and Leaders: Ensure your personnel are educated on the dangers of impaired driving and the use of the designated driver and "Arrive Alive" programs as necessary to prevent mishaps. To assist you in your duties, a "Leaders Guide" is provided for you on our website. For more information contact your Unit Safety Officer or your Base Safety Representative. Reunion: A Marine from 1st Marine Special Operations Battalion, embraces his daughter and his family for the first time in months, Nov. 17. MARSOC's silent warriors conducted special operations in the Philippines and Afghanistan in the first deployment of a company from 1st MSOB.

MARSOC warriors return from the fight

MARSOC Public Affairs

As all smiles, hugs, and tears of joy as a company of Marines and sailors from the 1st Marine Special Operations Battalion, U.S. Marine Corps Forces, Special Operations Command returned to the open arms of family and friends as they concluded an historic tour.

During the 1st MSOB's first deployment, MARSOC's silent warriors conducted special operations in the Philippines and Afghanistan with great success. At these Marines' return, the absolutely amazing 1st MSOB Sergeant Major, Barry Voss, said, "With MARSOC so young, it was important for these Marines to do well, and they did great things over the course of their deployment."

When leaving in late October, 2006, Marines returned to the Philippines where they spent more than a month conducting special operations in support of Joint Special Operations Task Force - Philippines, but the majority of the company's deployment was spent in Afghanistan's Helmund province.

According to Master Sgt. Sidney J. Voss, staff noncommissioned officer in charge and operations chief for the newly returned company, the Helmund province is a haven for the Taliban insurgency.

"The Helmund province is where insurgents have all their poppy fields and they are in and out of that area all the time," said Voss. "Our Marines went out every day knowing they were going to get in a fire-fight and that is no exaggeration."

While conducting combat operations in Afghanistan, the company worked with indigenous forces and other special operations teams to quell the insurgency.

Voss said he couldn't be happier with how his Marines performed.

"It was an honor to work with such professionals," said Voss. "The other special forces have been fighting at such a high level for so long and it was great to witness it."

Eighteen purple hearts were awarded out of a company of approximately 120 Marines upon returning home. One Marine was killed-in-action.

Now that the company is home, the Marines and sailors will get right back to work reviewing lessons learned and further improving their skills. With the first deployment of a company of Marines from 1st MSOB in the books, some MARSOC warriors will take the combat experience to other companies within the battalion.

"Now every company that goes on after us will be better because of the great things we accomplished out there," said Voss.

Active-duty Marines and sailors interested in joining MARSOC can contact the Marine Special Operations School at (910) 450-3349/3123 (DSN 750-3349/3123) or visit us online at www.marsoc.usmc.mil/recruiting. ■

Santa's flying helpers

Gunnery Sgt. Keith Desbois
Marine Corps Forces Command

SUFFOLK, Va. — On a brisk, quiet, November morning, members of the Hampton Roads Radio Control club were setting up for their first Toys For Tots fly-in. The calm was broken by the methodic beating of the twin rotors of a CH-46 Sea Knight helicopter as it approached the flying field.

To the club's delight, the "Frog" emblazoned with the tactical markings of the Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 774 from Marine Aircraft Group 42, in Norfolk, Va., settled softly on the ground near the runway. This signaled the beginning of the festivities to mark HRRC's endeavor to help disadvantaged children in the Hampton Roads area have a merry Christmas.

Events included unlimited flying with donation of a new, unwrapped toy, food served throughout the day, buddy box tethered flying for aspiring pilots, HRRC air show team demonstration for spectators and a raffle.

The day proved to be a huge success with food and raffle donations totaling almost $1,400 and 134 toys collected. This was one of the Marines' biggest events, said Lance Cpl. Josh Baughman.

"In the short time I have been here, HRRC collected more toys than when I stood outside a local toy store for the day," he said.

Marines in blue dress uniforms stood guard to ensure each toy would greet a shining little face on Christmas morning. By the end of the day, two large boxes were overflowing with gifts.

Food was abundant during the event, and attendees dug deep to fill the donation jar as they filed through the line. Club members had prepared homemade favorites to contribute to the feast as others manned the grill to cook what appeared to be hundreds of pounds of hamburgers, hotdogs and sausages.

For guests that wanted to give radio control flying a try, instructors were available with a trainer airplane to give them a taste of the wild blue yonder. Young and old alike enjoyed the opportunity and even the Marine helicopter crew gave it a shot. Each were given a chance to pilot the aircraft, sometimes with interesting results.

"He (instructor) only had to take it away from me twice," said Lt. Colonel Phil Grathwol, the MAG-42 commanding officer and CH-46 pilot. "I think I did pretty good!"

Local and national hobby stores generously donated items for a raffle which provided over $900 of the donations. In the spirit of giving, many winners auctioned off their prizes to further increase the contribution.

At the end of the day, 45 pilots registered to fly and over 200 spectators joined HRRC in supporting the Marines program. Everybody is looking forward to next year when the club will host its 2nd annual Toys For Tots fly-in.

"I think we will make this a regular thing. It's a pleasure for us to be here and it's a pleasure to have these guys come out and serve the Toys For Tots program, which is what it is all about," said Grathwol.

Hampton Roads Radio Control club prides itself on the outstanding support of its members and their families. To some, it is much more than a club.

"When I saw the Marines load the boxes of toys on the CH-46 and take off, I closed my eyes and said, 'Thank you, God for making sure at least some children won't be disappointed on Christmas morning.' Today changed the way I look at kids and Christmas. Just as important is how much more pride I have in Hampton Roads RC. When a person decides to join us they don't just join a club, they become a member of a family," said Frank Blanchard, HRRC life member. ■

Training in tight quarters no problem for Marine

Staff Sgt. Sergio Jimenez
11th MEU

ABOARD USS TARAWA — Desert convoy operations training aboard a ship? Absolutely, say Marine instructors here, who are conducting a five-day heavy machine gun employment, desert survival training and field radio operations course.

"Marines can train anywhere," said Sgt. Andrew G. Mulder, field radio operator instructor, command element, 11th Marine Expeditionary Unit, Camp Pendleton, Calif. "All it takes is a little imagination and flexibility."

Mulder is one of several Marine instructors who take their training seriously and who are spearheading a "shoot, move and communicate refresher" training designed for sergeants aboard the amphibious ship on their deployment through the Western Pacific Ocean and Arabian Gulf region.

"Sergeants are the leaders and the trainers," so it is natural to have sergeants training sergeants, said CWO-3 Robert T. Garcia, officer in charge, command element.

"The intent is to have each sergeant take back these 'hip-pocket' [informal] classes and pass on the knowledge to their Marines," said Garcia. The lessons they learn on the ship will serve as a foundation for their scheduled live-fire desert training the Marines and sailors will receive in the Arabian Gulf region next month.

Teaching: Sgt. Andrew G. Mulder, field radio operator and instructor, command element, 11th Marine Expeditionary Unit, Camp Pendleton, Calif., a native of Sioux Falls, S.D., teaches sergeants from the 11th MEU command element how to operate a field radio during a heavy machine gun employment, desert survival training and field radio operations course.

During the first day, Marines took turns getting behind the trigger of a heavy machine gun on the Tarawa's hangar bay as the amphibious ship sliced its way through dark blue water of the Pacific Ocean. Most of the sergeants have been on at least one deployment, so most were oblivious to the beauty outside and immune to noxious effect of the swaying deck. Their focus was on the weapon in front of them and the lesson at hand. The instructors reviewed the weapon conditions, safety and employment of the M249 Squad Automatic Weapon (SAW), M240G Medium Machine Gun and M2 .50 Caliber Heavy Machine and then tested each participant on his ability to break each weapon down, put it back together and dry-fire it.

On day two, some students received an introduction to convoy operations, learned how to conduct individual and vehicle pre-combat checks and inspections, how to plan a convoy and do vehicle preventive maintenance checks and services. On that day, the Marines were taught in the cramped and humid bowels of the ship. The next class they have on this subject will most likely be along a desert road and under a scorching desert sun.

During the third day and communications portion of the course and in the middle of the late afternoon rush hour, two groups of approximately two dozen sergeants were nestled between the gap of the ship's bulkhead (wall) and the side of a CH53E Super Stallion, listening intently to their instructors.

Due to limited space aboard the ship, this was the only place Mulder, and instructors Sgt. Justin H. Cook, Radio Reconnaissance Team Leader and Cpl. Eric B. Gonzales, field radio operator, could conduct their basic radio operations class. In the middle of the hustle and bustle of daily ship traffic, and despite minor interruptions, the class continued and Marines sent their radio traffic across the distance of a helicopter rather than distance of a desert.

According to Garcia, most Marines have cycled through three of the elements of the training since the course began Nov. 24.

No desert on a ship problem, say the Marines. The high heat and humidity of the ship's hangar can make a Marine's sweat just as much as the desert. It makes a "good enough" training environment to conduct the fourth desert survivability troop leading steps, Mulder.

During the final day sergeants will learn the parts of an operation and convoy orders. The class will be broken into groups and the sergeants will have to work together to develop a convoy operations order and then it to their peers. The group interaction will help the sergeants develop leadership skills. Leadership development is important to us because sergeants will be running the show when they go ashore, said Garcia.

According to Garcia there is another purpose to the course.

"We have supply, communications, administrative and intelligence Marines here. Each has different abilities and bring something different to the table," he said. "We want them to come together, each other up and help each other improve." ■

Once a Marine, always a Marine

Cpl. Billy Hall
2nd Marine Division

AL QA'IM, Iraq — The phrase, "Once a Marine, always a Marine," implies the title of U. S. Marine lasts a lifetime after serving your country as one of the few and the proud.

For one Marine, the memory of his years in the service was not enough to satisfy his devotion to duty and love for the Marine Corps.

Nearing his 40th birthday, Cpl. Robert Jordan, the armory's senior custodian for Company L of Task Force 3rd Battalion, 2nd Marine Regiment, Regimental Combat Team 2, craved the opportunity to once again wear the uniform of a United States Marine after leaving the Marine Corps 10 years ago.

Jordan graduated from Chester W. Nimitz high school in Irving, Texas, and shortly thereafter stepped on the infamous yellow footprints at Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego, Nov. 27, 1987.

Jordan took on the now non-existent military occupational specialty of dragon gunner and received orders to Marine Corps Barracks, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. After several years, Jordan was up for voluntary separation due to the downsizing of the Marine Corps.

Longing to work with Marines and weapon systems again, Jordan volunteered to help drill a reserve unit in Shreveport, La., from 1993-1995. He decided working with Marines was not as good as actually being one, so Jordan ended up signing a three-year contract as an active-duty field wireman from 1995-1998.

Jordan again left the Marine Corps in 1998 to give civilian life a chance. Five years later, he realized that serving his country is his calling.

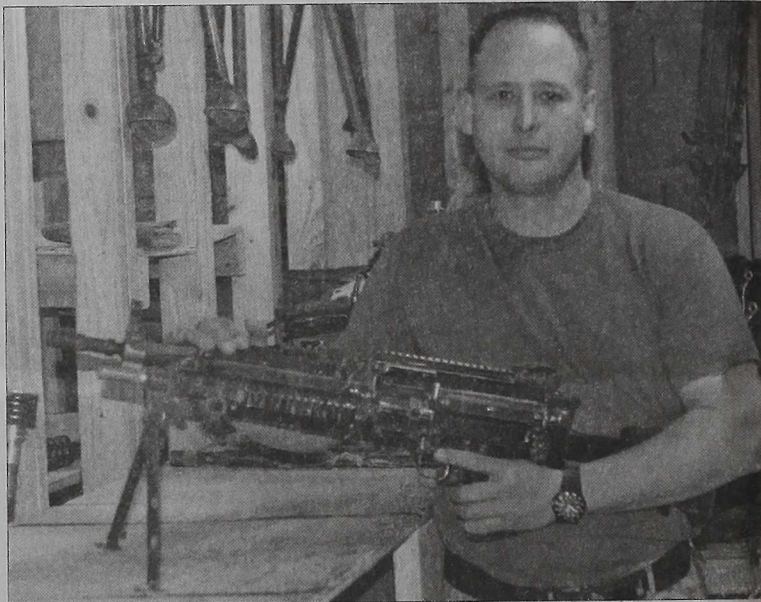

"Everyone was meant to do something: cooks, doctors, lawyers" Jordan said. "I believe God created me to be a war fighter." At the age of 34, Jordan entered a Marine Corps recruiting office with full intentions of re-enlisting, but the recruiter told him that it was not possible.

Heartbroken yet not defeated, the maturing veteran ran into a Coast Guard recruiter who went to his church. The Coast Guard offered Jordan a four-year contract as a gunner's mate. Because of the increased role of the Coast Guard after 9/11 and Jordan's past military experience, he had little trouble joining.

Ironically, the Coast Guard sent Jordan to Marine Special Operations Command at Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune, N.C., to help train Marines from 2003 to 2007. Working as an instructor for Marines and utilizing his knowledge of weapons, Jordan developed a passion for teaching.

"My students have told me that I have a way of breaking things down, so they can understand," said Jordan. "If it's a Mark-19 or smaller, I can teach you how to shoot it."

Jordan enjoyed his time in the Coast Guard, but when presented with the option of re-en-

Nearing his 40th birthday, Jordan craved the opportunity to once again wear the uniform of a United States Marine after leaving the Marine Corps almost 10 years ago.

listing and a promotion to petty officer first class, he had something else in mind.

"Some people asked if it was a mid-life crisis," Jordan said. "It was just devotion to duty and being a Marine at heart."

With the full support of his wife, Jordan took the opportunity to re-enlist as a corporal in the Marine Corps in 2007. He was assigned to Company L, 3rd Battalion, 2nd Marine Regiment and is proudly working as custodian of the armory at Camp Gannon, Husaybah, Iraq.

Jordan continues to look to the future and hopes to one day become a Marine Corps recruiter to help others appreciate the Marine Corps as much as he has. ■

Marines hand out school supplies, ensure Hawran is secure

Sgt. Zachary Dyer
2nd Marine Aircraft Wing (FWD)

SAD, Iraq — One of the goals of Marines in the Middle East is to win hearts and minds of the Iraqi people. It is easier to fight insurgents when they know the Marines are there to help. To that end, the Marines of 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing, Marine Wing Support Battalion 372 patrol the surrounding area, connecting with the local children and building a stronger relationship. To strengthen that relationship, the Marines delivered school supplies to a patrol of the area, Oct. 19, including paper, glue and soccer balls. Some of the things Marines gave to the school and the local children. Of immediate concern to the children were Gatorade packets that some handed out. Interacting with the children was a highlight of the patrol, giving a welcome break from searching cars and talking to shepherds. Knowing that they are making a little boy or girl's day makes it that much better, according to Cpl. Ian Maloney, a vehicle commander with 2nd Platoon, Alpha Company, Marine Wing Support Battalion 372.

"It's always enjoyable when you go to Hawran, or any time you meet shepherders or brass pickers, and they have kids with them," said Maloney, a Manchester, Ga., native. "It's enjoyable because you see them running around and all that, and it gives you a sense of normalcy. It kind of gives you a break, knowing that someone has that stable lifestyle. Giving the toys out and seeing the kids smile, it's always good knowing that you're doing something for them."

The Marines pass through Hawran on a regular basis. Most of the time they will stop and talk to the local Iraqis, but sometimes they will just drive through. The idea is to let the people of Hawran know the Marines are just around the corner.

"It's a presence patrol," explained Lance Cpl. Randy Dorrough, a vehicle commander with 2nd Platoon. "Basically what we do is go out there to let them know that we're here." It took a while for the local Iraqis to welcome the Marines, who are constantly working to earn and keep their trust.

"When we first got here, we basically just came out to meet everyone and find out where they live, stuff like that," explained Dorrough, a Champaign, Ill., native. "Now, we go into their house, and they would let you sit on their bed where they sleep. They don't have much but they'll give you their bread and their water."

That relationship is critical for the Marines to get information from the locals. If they do not trust the Marines or they fear retaliation from insurgents, the locals are less likely to give information that could save lives later on down the line.

"We're kind of like the police walking a beat," said Maloney. "But they know that as long as we're there, constantly coming through, the bad guys won't come in and make trouble."

"They've told us a couple times that they know they are safer because we're out there," added Cpl. Brian Nobles, a vehicle driver with

MALS Marines go from dangerous to dead

Cpl. Ryan Jackson
2nd Marine Aircraft Wing (FWD)

AL ASAD, Iraq — The only thing more intense than the heat in the desert of Iraq is the fury with which the Marines of Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron 29 execute their Marine Corps Martial Arts Program techniques.

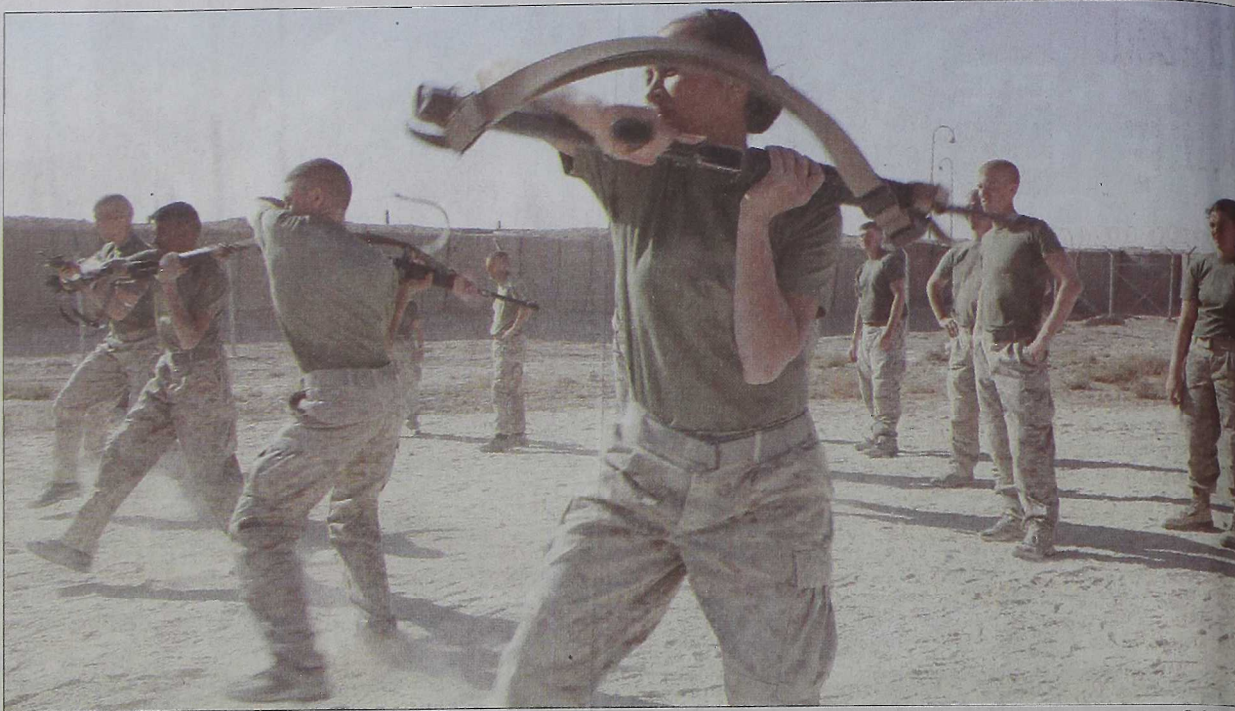

The MALS has eight instructors who have been steadily training Marines various shades of the MCMAP belt rainbow throughout the deployment to become better warriors and ensure they have met their qualifications.

The MCMAP instructors at MALS have been conducting courses since August and began another gray and green belt course, Nov. 1.

"The new (Marine Administrative Message) came out that everyone in the Aircraft Wing needs to be a gray belt, so we're trying to take a big chunk out of the tan belts we have," said Sgt. Miguel Salazar, an infantryman serving as a training clerk for MALS-29. "So, we're dealing with getting people to gray and green belts right now."

The courses are divided into gray belt from 12 p.m. to 4 p.m. and then 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. for green belt. There are at least two instructors for each course to ensure the techniques are taught properly and safely. There is also an additional instructor teaching the green belt course at the ordnance section which is detached from the MALS main body area of operations. Staff Sgt. Shon Somerville is the black belt instructor-trainer who runs the program and has the courses set up to ensure the Marines have more than enough hours to complete each course syllabus.

When learning a new belt, Ma-

Cpl. Ryan

Learning Martial Arts: Marines from Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron 29 execute the smash, a bayonet technique while remediating tan techniques during belt Marine Corps Martial Arts Program course, Nov. 1. The students spend approximately four hours every day for a month learning the martial arts techniques to earn their gray belts.

Marines first have to go through all of the prior belts they have already learned as refresher training, since higher level techniques are based off techniques from previous belts. When testing out for the new belt, Marines are tested on previous syllabi before being tested on the current belts techniques.

"A lot of Marines get their tan belt in boot camp and then wait three years before pursuing MCMAP again because of the time restraints we have in the air wing," said Salazar, a Brooklyn native. "Basically, we re-teach them the tan belt because they have probably forgotten and sometimes techniques are updated. Then, we teach them the new techniques and just drill everything into them."

The instructors believe teaching every element of the course, such as the warrior case studies and the nutrition portion is what makes warriors.

"There is a synergy to MCMAP, the mental, physical and character, it's not just a straightforward style," said Salazar, a black belt instructor. "We like to give the Marines the whole package, like teaching about other cultures and the way they fought. It builds on their character as Marines. Obviously, the physical aspect of doing all the drills and grappling is very important too. I also like to encourage Marines to think of new ways to complete or add onto certain techniques."

When the instructors ask for names for the courses, they try to find volunteers; Marines that actually want learn. That way they don't get any Marines that aren't motivated. "MCMAP is a good way to better myself and its good for career," said Sgt. Jon Dumb...

MALS-29 flight equipment technician. "It's also good to know something happens to the streets."

Staff Sgt. Marco Ortiz, a black belt instructor, believes MCMAP is such an effective tool because it brings Marines together and teaches them to trust each other. "Marines learn MCMAP for different reasons," said Ortiz. "Some expect to be physically challenged and some want to learn self-defense but one thing all Marines take is greater camaraderie."

Obstacle clearing teams keep Anbar roadways safe

Cpl. Thomas J. Griffith
2nd Marine Logistics Group

AL ASAD, Iraq — Lance Cpl. Allen R. Rossi said the closer service members get to a possible land mine or improvised explosive device, the less worried they become. "You won't feel a thing if it goes off that close," explained the Camden, Ohio, native.

That's why the members of the Obstacle Clearing Detachment walk a few meters ahead of everyone else. "Never step where we haven't swept" is their motto and they live by it, sweeping the dusty, trash-laden roads to ensure quick and safe passage for the convoys behind them.

The Marines of OCD, Engineer Company, Combat Logistics Battalion 4, 2nd Marine Logistics Group (Forward) embed with convoys to clear the roadways of debris, minefields or anything else that could impede the movement of vehicles and troops.

"They're basically putting themselves in harm's way so that the convoy can move safely and isn't slowed," said

Gunnery Sgt. Michael A. Leisure, the chief of Combat Engineer Platoon and a Parkersburg, W. Va., native.

The team also searches for improvised explosive devices and weapons caches, and when it finds them, calls in an explosive ordnance disposal team for disposal.

"The main goal is to find anything before it goes off," said Sgt. Levi A. Gundy, a detachment team leader and Keokuk, Iowa, native. "It's hard to explain how to get comfortable with it."

By trade, these Marines are combat engineers, a job that normally entails building structures, breaching entryways and providing security. Assignment to the clearing detachment is an additional duty that poses its own potential dangers, but Marines like Cpl. Jamison A. Elmore, a detachment team member, said they prefer the unique challenge the OCD missions provide.

"It's one of the most important jobs out here," explained the Plymouth, Minn., native. "Wherever anyone's going, they're going to need to arrive safely. We're one of the few guys who can offer that to them."

The hardest part of the job, according to Elmore, is the difficulty of spotting many of the dangers they are looking for. Often times, trash lines the streets and the roads are covered with a fine sand the Marines refer to as moon dust. The small size of many of the objects they're searching for also causes a problem. Improvised explosive devices vary in size and shape and littered roadways are ideal for concealment.

Leisure said the OCD Marines are "true professionals" and although many of the Marines are on their first deployment, they handle the tasks assigned to them without hesitation.

"They're very efficient and by the time they come (back to Iraq), they'll be maturing corporals teaching their Marines the same things," he said. "We like to have fun, but as soon as we cross that (entry control point), it's game on."

Habbaniyah
Revitalized
Facility
Openings

Cpl. Bryce Muhlenberg

Revitalizing Habbaniyah: Iraqi children crowd outside of a newly built and opened elementary school and medical facility in Habbaniyah Iraq. In prior months in this area, similar facilities were destroyed by terrorists utilizing a vehicle borne IEDs.

"We created what we call an Iraqi civil affairs committee," said Thomas, 28. "They go into an area to see what can be done and then submit an official report, which is presented to the mayor of the town and myself. Then we have experts go out and assess these proposed projects. This is mostly Iraqi and this is how they are helping themselves."

The team has encouraged the locals in each area to form a strong and active city council, which works to run and improve each area. According to Furat Mohammed, the director of security for the city council, the Marines and the city council have been good for his community. "Right now, we only have to work on street lights and trying to improve electricity. Some of them have been fixed and we are getting equipment. What's going on right now is the area is coming together as a whole around what has been established here by the Marines' team. They are good guys and we know there is a lot of pressure on them, but they are still pulling through and a lot of great construction has been done. It's going to be better in the future with (Coalition Forces) and Iraqis working together," Mohammed said.

Thomas said revitalizing the educational establishment in the region was a linchpin in improving conditions over the long term. "Schools enhance the neighborhoods," said Thomas. "Without schools there is no education for the youth, and now, with the progress in the area, they don't have to fear that their schools will be shot or blown up. It gives them hope for the future and gives them back services that they have not had in a long time."

When the team goes to check on the progress of their schools, it's always a fresh look into the future of the communities. The children are happy and attendance is on the rise, said Mohammed Araq Hussien, the director of a local school. "A couple of years ago, with Saddam, this school was no good," said Hussien. "But now it is very good, because the kids enjoy school now, since it has been refurbished. It is nice and clean, a good place for children to get their education. To Iraqis and Muslims, education is essential. With knowledge, you can progress. Knowledge is the base of life. Our prophet Mohammed said that to succeed, you need knowledge in this life, in the next life and in both. Our prophet asks us to take in knowledge from birth to death. You know, the first verse and the first word of the Quran is knowledge. With the team here, we get more help and we have built more classes. We need more help with books, but God willing, we can get them ourselves."

From an outside view, the sight of children cheering and learning in the safe and secure schools is the most visible example of the progress made in the area.

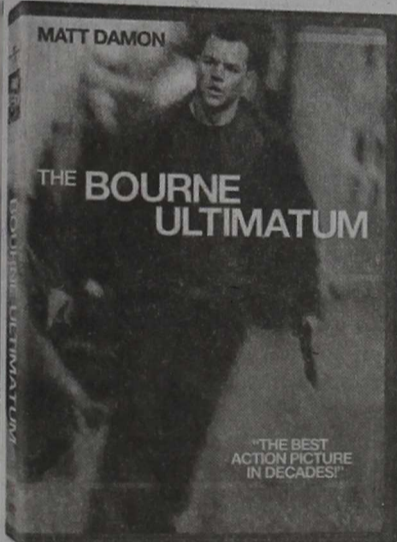

"We wouldn't be half as far as we are now without their engagement, their willingness to go the extra mile," said Thomas, a native of Lacrosse, Va., talking about his Marines. "Success is an understatement. We won't leave a project until we're done ... It feels good that we are completing our mission and the job we, specifically, were sent here to do."

The day was almost done and the Marines had completed what they had come to do, but one of the local headmasters for the area wasn't quite finished speaking to the crowd within the school. The man had a quick reminder to give to his people and thanks to give to the Marines before everyone went back to their homes and the Marines headed toward base.

"I want to tell you a little bit about our area," said the educator. "Only one year ago we weren't free to speak our mind, the schools were closed and there were women who were having their babies (without any medical care.) This is an unnatural way to live, but now we have the school and the new clinic and we can progress. God bless the Americans ... they are the only ones who help us every time." ■

LORTON YOUTH CENTER, LORTON, Va. — Marines and sailors from Chemical Biological Incident Response Force, II Marine Expeditionary Force, participated in training exercise Capital Shield '07 here in October.

In this simulation, a terrorist attack required a joint task force of emergency responders including the FBI and District of Columbia Fire Department.

"We had a bombing and a possible [chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear, or high-yield explosive] attack," said Sgt. Brett Dayton, force protection line supervisor, Company B, CBIRF. "Casualties came through the (decontamination) line and medical personnel assessed them."

After casualties penetrated CBIRF's decontamination perimeter, responders worked through the presence of a notionally contaminated environment.

The Incident Response Force, in CBIRF, is a response team of Marines whose mission is to deploy to a real-world catastrophe, help mitigate the threat, and extract and decontaminate casualties.

"We're really good at flooding the contaminated zone and the hot zone with a lot of extractors," said Gunnery Sgt. Trenton Widdis, company gunnery sergeant, Co. B, CBIRF. "[CBIRF] is pretty much the only unit that does medical assessments and mass decontamination in a contaminated environment."

CBIRF's Medical Platoon is comprised of the only Navy corpsmen serving with the Marine Corps who practice emergency medicine in a contaminated environment.

The platoon played a vital role in providing victims with initial medical treatment during the training.

"I applied dressings to any open wounds, made sure their airway was open and made sure they were stable," said Seaman Rosalie Bennett, a hospital corpsman with CBIRF's Medical Platoon.

The broken decontamination line also served as an obstacle for the medical platoon.

"When we first got here, patients came out rushing us," Bennett said. "So we ran to them with medical bags, and we started treating the immediate [victims]."

CBIRF's medical personnel work intimately with Marines, making one of the nation's premiere emergency response forces and the only unit of its kind in the Marine Corps. ■

Marines must extract victims and escort them to medical personnel or decontamination facilities.

"When the Marines come here to CBC, we don't let them get away with minimal effort," said retired Marine Master Sgt. Pat Higgins, CBC instructor. "They give maximum effort."

"When Marines switch jobs going from working on the decontamination line to extracting casualties, the Marines' CBC knowledge takes effect," said Lance Cpl. Alec Welker, a training clerk with CBIRF's Headquarters and Service Company. "(The CBC) gives you very good knowledge on what you'll be doing with different effects of (nuclear, radiological, biological, and chemical) agents and the equipment you'll be using. Extracting is easy to teach but when Marines cross-train, the knowledge from CBC is most helpful."

CBC training efforts have become an integral part of the unit's operations. "Sweat and equity—that's what it is today," Higgins said. ■

In addition to reduced operations, the president explained that Gates has directed the two services to develop a plan to lay off civilian employees and terminate contracts.

Trout keep winter fishing productive

It's hard to stay focused on fishing as the holiday season gets into full swing. Let's face it; there are a lot of spouses out there — fishing widows and widowers — who'd just as soon all the fish in the sea would swim away for a couple of months.

There are those who may be mistaken into thinking that is actually the case now that water temperatures have fallen into the mid-50s. If you're still fishing, you're officially diehard about it. You probably also know something the guys and girls sitting in front of the television don't — there are still fish to be caught, you just have to work harder for them.

The great red and black drum runs of recent weeks appear to be finally over, according to Richard Ehrenkauffer, a.k.a. Dr. Bogus. Surf and pier fishermen are still catching a few black drum, along with the usual blowfish, skates, sea mullet and small sharks. The baits of choice remain the same as they did in the fall; fresh shrimp, cut mullet and anything else that hasn't been frozen. Of course, frozen bait will work in a pinch, but the fresh stuff will out-fish it day-in and day-out.

Outside the inlets there are false albacore still schooling. "Fat Alberts," as they are known, are small members of the tuna family and therefore possess all the attributes of the well-known clan except, unfortunately, palatability. Averaging between 5-15 pounds, false albacore provide great sport, especially on light tackle, but taste terrible. The meat is quite dark and strongly-flavored and is best left attached to the fish, which are most valuable when they are released to fight again another day. These small tunas hit a variety of casting spoons, diving plugs and even, on occasion, topwater baits. They are also a favorite target for saltwater flyfishermen, giving those lucky enough to entice a strike all they can handle on the challenging tackle.

It's easy to get excited when a school of a hundred or so false albacore erupt at the surface as they attack a shoal of small baitfish. The temptation is to fire up the outboard and charge over to the action, but that is a mistake. False albacore are skittish around boat traffic and are therefore best approached cautiously. Cut the engine off a good ways from the busting albacore and let momentum bring you into casting range. When you come in quietly, you stand a good chance of catching several fish before the school moves on. Just hope the other anglers around you show the same judgment and everyone can enjoy the action for as long as it lasts. It only takes one yahoo driving full bore into the middle of the frenzy to put the fish down and ruin it for everyone.

Albacore and surfside panfish are all well and good, but the real coastal player this time of year is the speckled trout. Trout are still active in the sounds and creeks back in coastal marshes and tidal rivers. Dr. Bogus reports solid fishing in western Bogue Sound and at the Cape Lookout Jetty. Top producers include live shrimp and mud minnows, MirrOlures, and soft plastic shrimp and grub imitations.

A successful technique for fishing these sluggish winter trout is employing a popping cork. The cork is a bobber with a cup-shaped top. An imitation shrimp or grub is fished underneath the cork at a depth dictated by the water depth. Cast out into a trouty looking spot and retrieve the bait with short jerks to get the cork to pop along the surface. Speckled trout are attracted to the commotion made by the cork and then grab the lure trailing underneath. Dr. Bogus has been having good luck with the technique and recommends a slow retrieve for the best results.

As always in the cold weather, log a float plan with someone before you leave and be prepared for anything. Falling overboard in December carries much graver consequences than similar mishaps in the warmer months. Good fishing to you. ■

Osborne to announce Nebraska's new coach

News report
The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Bo Pelini appears set to become the coach at Nebraska.

A day after the Louisiana State University defensive coordinator declined to discuss published reports he was taking over for the Bill Callahan, interim athletic director Tom Osborne scheduled a news conference Sunday to announce the Cornhuskers' new coach.

"We'll see what happens over the next couple of days," Osborne said shortly after the Tigers defeated Tennessee in the Southeastern Conference championship.

Osborne denied an ESPN report Friday he had picked Pelini, former Huskers assistant, but told The Associated Press "it was too much longer" before he made a decision.

"There are so many rumors and so much speculation," Osborne said. "We'll announce it when we're ready and everything is in place."

LSU athletic director Skip Bertman said he spoke with the year-old Pelini before the SEC title game about the reports.

"Pelini doesn't know anything about that, at least that's what I told me," Bertman said. "I'll tell you this, he would deserve a job. He's an excellent, excellent coach."

Osborne had said when announcing Callahan's firing that the next coach didn't need to have Nebraska ties. Pelini was on the Nebraska in 2003, but his no-nonsense, hardworking style coaching defense quickly made him a popular figure.

Pelini was interim coach after Frank Solich was fired following the 2003 regular season, coaching the Huskers to an Alamo Bowl victory over Michigan State.

Osborne has interviewed Pelini and Buffalo coach Turner Gill, former star Nebraska quarterback and longtime assistant. ■

Reset: Ohio State No. 1, LSU No. 2 in AP

Ralph D. Russo
AP college football writer

NEW YORK — Let's try this again. Ohio State was No. 1 and LSU was No. 2 in the Associated Press Top 25 on Sunday, just as they were a month ago, before four weeks of upsets and unlikely results capped the most unpredictable college football season in recent memory.

Essentially, voters in the media poll hit the reset button on the final regular season ranking.

After the top two teams in the rankings lost for the second straight week, Ohio State jumped two spots to No. 1. The Buckeyes, who haven't played since they wrapped up the Big Ten title with a 14-3 victory over Michigan on Nov. 17, received 50 first-place votes out of a possible 65.

LSU moved up three spots from No. 5 after winning the Southeastern Conference championship with a 21-14 victory over Tennessee on Saturday. The Tigers got 11 first-place votes.

Ohio State and LSU (11-2) were also Nos. 1 and 2 in the coaches' poll, with Oklahoma (11-2) third and Georgia (10-2) fourth.

Ohio State (11-1) was expected to be on top of the Bowl Championship Series standings when they were released Sunday night and earn a spot in the national championship game. The spot opposite the Buckeyes was a tough call after Saturday night's results, with several two-loss teams in the running.

Missouri and West Virginia were the latest teams unable to deal with success and lose with the loftiest rankings in the AP Top 25. When Missouri lost 38-17 to Oklahoma in the Big 12 title game on Saturday, it marked the fourth time this season No. 1 has lost. Ohio State was No. 1 when it lost on Nov. 10 to Illinois and LSU has lost twice as No. 1, including a triple-overtime setback to Arkansas the day after Thanksgiving.

The Tigers have also had two previous stints at No. 2, but haven't lost ranked second in the nation. They should consider themselves lucky. What a burden No. 2 has been this season.

West Virginia became the seventh team ranked No. 2 to lose this season, when it fell 13-9 to Pittsburgh. The Panthers made it six times that No. 2 has lost to an unranked team.

Oklahoma jumped six places to No. 3 and got a first-place vote, as did No. 4 Georgia and No. 5 Virginia Tech, which won the Atlantic Coast Conference with a 30-16 victory over Boston College.

No. 6 Southern California, which started the season as No. 1, won the Pac-10 title with a 24-7 victory over UCLA on Saturday.

Missouri fell all the way to No. 7 and was followed by Kansas, which dropped three spots to No. 8 a week after losing its big game against the Tigers.

No. 9 Florida was followed by Hawaii. The 10th-ranked Warriors are the only unbeaten team left in the major college football and they also received a first-place vote.

Tennessee, Texas, Wisconsin, BYU and Cincinnati round out the top 20. Virginia, Auburn, South Florida, Boise State and Arkansas are the final five, with the Razorbacks re-entering the rankings this week.

Three times this season Nos. 1 and 2 in the poll have lost in the same weekend. The first time was Oct. 13 when No. 1 LSU lost at Kentucky and No. 2 California fell to Oregon State. ■

Lejeune prepares for fight night

Jamie Cameron
Assistant managing editor

Marines and sailors aboard Camp Lejeune and satellite installations are about to get exactly what they've been wanting, a mixed martial arts cage match extravaganza, set for March 28.

On that night, Goettge Memorial Field House will rock to the thunderous sound of professional gladiators going blow-for-blow in the middle of up to 5,200 screaming fans. They have three Marine Corps wives to thank for the event — an effort that took eight months to obtain the necessary approvals and coordinate. Now all Monica Sanford, Andrea Lucie and Nicky Crays have to do is work out the logistics.

All three women work directly or indirectly with Marine Corps Community Services Semper Fit, which will host the International Sports Combat Federation for the cage fights.

Lucie, coordinator for Semper Fit's Group Exercise Mobile Unit, said a mixed martial arts fight night is long overdue. "Working with Semper Fit, we all know what the young Marines like ... [A mixed martial arts cage match] represents the Marine Corps' conception of a warrior in combat and now we're going to bring it here. It's perfect."

The idea may be perfect, but convincing those who needed to sign-off on it took time — seven months to be exact. "Just imagine seven months of pitching this proposal; three women coming in saying, 'We want to put on a cage fight.' People looked at us like we were crazy," admitted Sanford, owner of a production company and Brazilian Jiu Jitsu studio in Jacksonville. "We have this vision that now looks like it's coming together. It's going to be really cool."

With professionals and amateurs on the fight card, including some active-duty Marines from the area, the trio expects a sellout and VIP tickets to go quickly once they become available. Proceeds from ticket sales will go toward recouping MCCS' expenses for bringing the event to Camp Lejeune. If additional money is raised, a percentage will be split evenly among the United Services

Organization Jacksonville, Hope for the Warriors and Ronald McDonald House in Washington D.C.

"MCCS is not looking to make a profit — it never does [with bringing events like this to base]," said Crays, Semper Fit special events coordinator. "From now until the cage fight, we will be looking for sponsors to help make it a night everyone will remember, from the fighters, to the VIPs, to the fans in the stands."

Although the official fight card will not be released until about a month before the event, the women are confident it will include some of the big names mixed martial arts fans are familiar with.

"The 2nd Marine Expeditionary Force is scheduled to be coming home sometime around the beginning of the year," said Sanford. "This event will be sort of a 'welcome home — thank you' for them. Hopefully, they'll be ready for a great show."

Editor's note: For up-to-date information on this event, check the ISCF calendar on its Web site at www.iscfmma.com or call Crays at 451-7002. ■

Baseball writers honor Indians' Sabathia, Shapiro

News report
The Associated Press

CLEVELAND — C.C. Sabathia, winner of the 2007 AL Cy Young Award, received another honor Sunday when he was named the Cleveland Indians' Man of the Year by the local chapter of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

General manager Mark Shapiro was selected as the winner of the Steve Olin Good Guy Award for his cooperation with the media.

The 27-year-old Sabathia emerged as one of baseball's best pitchers in 2007. The left-hander went 19-7 with a 3.21 ERA, 209 strikeouts and only 37 walks while pitching a major league-high 241 innings.

Sabathia won his latest honor in a close vote over catcher Victor Martinez, who led the Indians in home runs (25), RBIs (114) and batting average (.301).

Right-handers Carmona and Betancourt also were nominated for the award which annually recognizes the player who had the most significant impact on the Indians' season. Carmona went 19-8 with a 3.06 ERA while Betancourt anchored a strong bullpen by going with a 1.47 ERA, three strikeouts and a remarkable 80-to-strikeout-to-walks ratio.

Shapiro was recognized by writers who cited his general manager's regular availability and forthright approach with all members on a regular basis. Last month, he was named major league executive of the year by The Sports Illustrated magazine for the second time in three years.

Right-handers Westbrook and Joe Borow along with first baseman Ryan Garko also were nominated for the Good Guy Award. ■

Planning stages: The Mixed Martial Arts cage match planners, from the left, Nicky Crays, Monica Sanford and Andrea Lucie, try to imagine how Goettge Memorial Field House will look on fight night.

Padres sign Wolf to 1-year deal

Bernie Wilson
AP sports writer

SAN DIEGO — Randy Wolf and the San Diego Padres agreed in principle Saturday to a one-year deal that would pay the left-hander about $9 million, bounces back from shoulder surgery and meets performance bonuses.

The deal is contingent on Wolf passing a physical. Wolf was with the Los Angeles Dodgers last season and didn't pitch after July 3 due to soreness in his shoulder. He had surgery in September.

Wolf will earn approximately $4 million salary if the deal goes through, according to a source with knowledge of the deal who spoke on condition of anonymity because the deal hasn't been finalized.

Wolf was 9-6 with a 4.23 ERA in 18 starts with the Dodgers.

He would join a rotation that includes Cy Young winner Jake Peavy, Chris Young and Greg Maddux.

Wolf has not completed a full season since he returned to pitching for Philadelphia in June after missing more than a year because of Tommy John surgery.

He signed an $8 million, one-year contract with his hometown Dodgers last offseason. The Dodgers have a million option for 2008 that would have become guaranteed if he pitched 180 innings last year. Due to the sore shoulder, he pitched only 102 2-3 innings. Wolf earned $7.5 million last year, and got a $500,000 buyout.

Also Saturday, the Padres offered salary arbitration to catcher Michael Barrett and center fielder Jamie Cameron. The Padres expect Barrett to accept and Cameron to decline. Cameron has been suspended the first 25 games of next season after testing positive for a banned stimulant.

The Padres declined to offer arbitration to left fielder Milton Bradley, who had surgery on his right knee in September. Bradley tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee when Padres manager Bud Black hit him to the ground to keep him from going after pitcher Mike Winters during a blowup on Sept. 23. ■

PGA pro instructs techniques for wounded

Press release
PGA of America

Professional Golf Association member, Judy Alvarez of Palm City, Fla., was a guest instructor at Paradise Point Golf Course aboard Camp Lejeune Nov. 28. She addressed her peers on how to be better golf instructors for 50 to 100 wounded Marines who are currently being treated here. The Marines will learn how to use the game of golf as part of their rehabilitation for the injuries they received in the line of duty.

Alvarez began her professional golf career in 1993 as an instructor for golfers with disabilities. Since then, she has become PGA of America's National Trainer for the disabled, traveling across the country, meeting the hundreds of veterans and wounded warriors.

"The look on their faces when they hit a ball or realize maybe football isn't their sport anymore, but, wow, the game of golf is something they can do and do well," said Alvarez. "I think it's neat when I have heard numerous military say they thought golf was a dumb sport or something to that effect and now due to an injury they are giving it a try and realize it's not easy, but they sure do like the challenge."

Bruce Oliver, a PGA Master Professional and PGA head professional at Paradise Point was among the golf professionals at Alvarez's seminar.

"I am excited about the possibility of teaching our great Marines how to have fun on the golf course after their injury," said Oliver. "Our goal is to have anyone in rehabilitation at Camp Lejeune be exposed to golf as a part of their recovery."

Once Alvarez concluded the training session, the PGA Professionals she guided will be providing instruction to wounded Marines from Camp Lejeune. The Marines will receive a curriculum that goes well beyond the basic Rules of Golf and golf's fundamental skills.

The PGA Professionals will be able to employ techniques that would utilize adaptive equipment where necessary, demonstrate how golf may be used as part of rehabilitation and teach safety concerns in swinging a golf club and the importance of stretching.

"They love that we are taking time out of our schedules to help them learn to hit a ball for the first time or to relearn a modified swing with gadgets and assistive devices," Alvarez said. "I look at their injuries and say, 'Thank you very much for going overseas to defend my country.' I want to give back to them and they appreciate that."

For more information on The PGA of America/Disabled Sports Military Golf Program, please visit www.pgafoundation.com. To find a PGA Professional who teaches those with disabilities, please visit www.PlayGolfAmerica.com.

The PGA of America is the world's largest working sports organization, comprised of 28,000 men and women golf Professionals who are the recognized experts in growing, teaching and managing the game of golf while serving millions of people throughout its 41 PGA Sections nationwide. ■

Semper Fit trainers lead a group of Marines in unit physical training. This is just one of the services the Semper Fit program offers the Marines. The Mobile Unit will go out to any part of base as well as off base at request a PT session to be lead by the Semper Fit ladies. A new program starting at the beginning of the year will contain 36 different types of fitness training and will be featured in more than 60 classes

Living to stay fit; Camp Lejeune Marines have options

Marine Corps Base

Like always, the Marines is all about fitness. The camp's constant physical challenges to annual fitness tests, if a Marine of shape, he is out of it. More than any other service are known for their physical training and high standards. Marine Corps Administrative Order 174/03: "I will administer the PFT annually (calendar year) to all Marines serving on active duty, regardless of age, gender, grade, rank, or duty assignment." The Marine Corps has done a lot to help its Marines get in good physical condition by providing state-of-the-art fitness center. Along with the equipment provided in the center, personal trainers are offered free of charge to help Marines and to the dependents for a very small fee. If you are a Marine or dependent, we first give them a fitness assessment, then dependents what they want out of the center, we help them set up a plan," said Julie Clark, personal trainer at the Area II Fitness Center here.

Personal trainers like Clark offer, there are many other programs and facilities that Marine Corps Community Services offers here.

"The pool has aerobics classes; we have a running club that keeps track of mileage, prizes are given out when a certain distance is reached," said Clark. "Throughout the year we have different programs for functional areas, such as pre-deployment training."

Personal trainers working at the gym are developing a new weight loss program, which should be starting Jan. 1. Hopefully this will help Marines with their New Year's resolutions, said Clark.

A good workout is nothing if proper nutrition is not maintained, said Whitney Mikalkowski, who runs the juice bar at the Area Two Fitness Center.

"We can make juice drinks, smoothies and protein shakes, which can be based around the specific work out or diet you are working on," she said. "We can make meal-replacement shakes, protein-packed ones for muscle mass or slimming fruit shakes."

These Fitness Center are open all day and later in the evenings for Marines and dependents to use, but let's say you can't get to the gym because of unit meeting or lack of time. MCCS has an answer for that too.

If you have been on or around base for long you have probably seen them, and if you have, you know they are insane.

I am talking about the SemperFit ladies and the extreme and brutal work-out sessions they conduct.

SemperFit is one-of-a-kind and has a great reputation for a reason. Not only do these ladies teach classes at the base fitness centers, but the SemperFit mobile unit goes out to bring the 'pain' to anyone.

"We have traveled to other bases to put on mass work-out sessions; the mobile unit is very unique," said Andrea Lucie, the group exercise and mobile unit coordinator. "It's ready to go 24 hours a day, seven days a week, rain or shine."

SemperFit is designing a schedule for the upcoming year that includes 36 different types of fitness training.

"We have classes like power yoga, warrior-mind training and spinning," said Lucie.

The Semper Fit ladies will be conducting about 60 classes per week for Marines, dependants and civilian workers.

"We will do unit PT for groups from 30 people and up. We have done a group as big as 2,500 Marines before," said Lucie.

Marines are known for high physical standards and stamina, so whenever possible take advantage of these programs provided by the Corps, it can only help. ■

Work out: Marines work out at the Area Two gym. Gyms, fitness programs, personal trainers and dietitians are just some of the many fitness services that are offered to Marines and their families.

Plans for Rangers already off center, no arbitration for Sosa

Stephen Hawkins
AP sports writer

Center plans for the Texas Rangers have already shifted off center.

Getting an upgrade in center field has been at the top of the priority list for the Rangers. But the decision to sign Torii Hunter to sign with the Los Angeles Angels rather than with Texas to be close to his home has possibly altered the Rangers' focus a bit.

Manager Jon Daniels said before leaving Texas for baseball's winter meetings that begin Monday in Nashville, Tenn. "I have [players] to play center field. That allows us to play both corners, and center."

The Rangers also would like to add a veteran reliever to the late in games, but prefer not to give a reliever a one-year deal. Also on their want list is a left-of-the-order hitter who could also play first base. There have been talks "about a lot of things with other clubs" and conversations with several free agents, but the Rangers aren't likely to be very active in winter meetings, and might come home without any deals.

Designated hitter Sammy Sosa was declined salary arbitration before Saturday night's deadline, along with Jamey Wright, Jerry Hairston Jr. and Brad Wilkerson. But that doesn't preclude the Rangers from re-signing Sosa or any of the others at any time.

Daniels said there have been some conversations with Sosa's agent, Adam Katz, about the slugger returning next season. But Katz is also still trying to get a feel for what Sosa's free agency value is.

"We haven't exchanged anything," Daniels said. "We agreed to stay in touch."

There have also been talks with Wright, who had success as a starter and reliever last season. But Wilkerson and Hairston aren't expected to be back.

When free agency began, Hunter was a high priority for the Rangers. They were willing to spend money on him — a $75 million, five-year offer — and hoped he really wanted to play close to his home that is less than an hour from their ballpark. But within a day or so after meeting last month with Texas, Hunter agreed to a $90 million, five-year contract with its AL West rivals.

"He was the one guy that we were looking at that we would be willing to go that long on in terms of dollars and terms of contract," Daniels said. "It only takes one [other team] to take the price to a point that it doesn't make sense for us any more. That's what happened."

Daniels insists the Rangers never necessarily counted on getting Hunter. But they sure were hoping to be able to sign him.

After the Rangers dealt 40-year-old Kenny Lofton at the trade deadline, Marlon Byrd and David Murphy split time in center. They may wind up being the best options next spring.

Byrd was left off the roster out of spring training, but hit .307 with 10 homers and 70 RBIs in 109 games after being recalled May 26. Murphy came in the deal that sent closer Eric Gagne to Boston, then hit .343 in 46 games.

Daniels said Jarrod Saltalamacchia, the 22-year-old switch-hitter who split time at first base and catcher after coming from Atlanta in the Mark Teixeira deal, is expected to be a full-time catcher next season. But it seems more likely that Gerald Laird might remain in Texas after failed trade talks with the New York Mets.

"We started the offseason with the idea that Gerald and Jarrod would be there in spring training, unless we saw something that really made sense to us," Daniels

Firefighters conduct hazardous material training

Suit up: Firefighters suit up for the long, extensive training they have ahead of them. Tanks on their back supply them with 25 minutes of clean oxygen and Level A suits provide them safety from hazardous materials.

What do you do if you receive a suspicious package in the mail without a return address? Dial 911.

The Camp Lejeune Fire Department prepared for just those kinds of situations by conducting a hazardous material exercise at the Fire Protection Division Training Area here Thursday to prepare for these situations.

Firefighters arrived at 9:30 a.m. and an hour later a package was discovered in the Smoke House, which is used to simulate dangerous environments in a controlled setting. Two firefighters cautiously approached the package with Level A protective gear and hazardous material detection devices. Alarms on the devices began to go off and firefighters verified the presence of radioactive material within the package.

"The precautions taken to properly locate, detect and extract the hazardous package are a result of excellent training," said Glenn Zurek, assistant chief of the Camp

Lejeune Fire Department.

To better expedite the detection of hazardous materials, firefighters have created a team-based method of searching out dangers.

The primary team's job is to locate and detect any hazardous materials throughout the building. As the primary team exits the building, firefighters wait at a safe distance, ready to sterilize the two men after coming in contact with the radioactive material.

They are sprayed, scrubbed and checked for

MARINE CORPS AIR STATION NEW RIVER, N.C. — Santa upgraded from his traditional eight reindeer to an eight-cylinder, 505-horsepower, rear-wheel drive Chevrolet Corvette.

From Myrtle Beach, S.C. to Jacksonville, N.C., Corvette

clubs gathered Saturday on the flight line at MCAS New River for an annual event to raise money and donate toys to service members who are having financial troubles.

"My husband started the toy run 15 years ago with eight cars and now we have 88 from three different Corvette clubs in the Carolinas," said Phyllis Casey, retired Gunnery Sgt. Michael Casey's widow.

Gunnery Sgt. Michael Casey left the Marine Corps with a new ambition in life; to help those in need. It started when one of his Marines began having money problems and couldn't support his family during the holidays, explained Casey. Until recently, he would gather with his Corvette club and organized a

Chaplains celebrate 232 years

Lance Cpl. Thomas J. Hermesman
Marine Corps Base

"As they say, it only took 18 days for the Navy to realize the Marines needed some spiritual guidance," joked Rear Adm. Chaplain Robert F. Burt, chief of the Navy Chaplains Corps.

In the ball room of the Paradise Point Officers Club a crowd full of Navy chaplains from around Camp Lejeune as well as Marines and guests all broke out laughing at the remark during the Chaplains' Birthday Ball Nov. 29.

The event was in commemoration of the 232 years of distinguished service the Navy Chaplain Corps has given to the sea services of the United States military.

Burt was introduced and received by Marine Corps Base Commanding Officer Col. Adele E. Hodges.

Enlisting in the Navy in May 1970 His enlisted service included three years as a communications technician and three and a half years aboard the USS Kitty Hawk as a data processor. Burt completed boot camp at Recruit Training Command; Orlando, Fla. After his honorable discharge in March of 1977, Burt completed his Bachelor of Science in Biblical Studies from Eugene Bible College. He received his Master of Divinity degree from Western Evangelical Seminary, Portland, Ore. in May, 1981. An ordained minister of the Open Bible Churches, Burt is endorsed by the National Association of Evangelicals for military chaplaincy. He became the 24th Chief of Navy Chaplains on June 23, 2006. ■

Base Commander says proper attire in facilities must be enforced at ALL levels

A Letter from the Commanding Officer:

I recently encountered a situation that greatly concerns me and I want to bring it to the attention of all Marines and Sailors who work aboard the base and frequent our base exchanges. This past Sunday evening, while on my way to my quarters, I stopped by the 7 Day Store and witnessed a young Marine making a purchase wearing nothing more than his green t-shirt, utility trousers and boots. With more than 30 of his fellow Marines looking on, I personally counseled him on the established base rules governing authorized attire in MCCS facilities aboard Camp Lejeune.

Base regulations, clearly visible in all our exchanges, expressly prohibit anyone wearing inappropriate civilian attire or PT gear from specific MCCS facilities (Base Order 1020.8W) to include 7 Day stores. By definition, a Marine without a blouse on is in PT gear (he told me he was in "boots and utes").

Perhaps because I was not in uniform, this Marine became argumentative and even after identifying myself, he continued to show disrespect. Because of his inappropriate attire and belligerent behavior, I ordered him to leave store property immediately without making his purchase.

What makes this incident particularly frustrating to me is that it was allowed to happen in the first place. I should never have had to personally counsel this Marine on what constitutes appropriate attire — especially when approximately thirty of his colleagues, who also know the rules, were standing there watching him. Store personnel inform me that Marines have frequented this facility in similar states of attire quite regularly. When approached by store personnel (some who are retired Marine Sgts/Maj and MGySgts), they are, more often than not, ignored or talked back to.

My purpose for publishing the security camera footage is not necessarily to identify this Marine but to demonstrate how relaxed standards of dress and behavior have at times become acceptable because Marines have stood idly by when they should be correcting their peers or juniors on the spot.

Leaders, I challenge all of you to reverse this growing trend and start demanding accountability from your Marines and Sailors. The American people have always held the Corps in high esteem. Let's not disappoint them. — A.E. Hodges ■

What's in a name?

The way of things with
Sgt. T.D. Smith

Nicknames are often used as terms of kinship. It may come as little surprise that Marines have often bestowed a special handle on some of their endearing heroes.

Manila John or Gunnery Sgt. John Basilone acquired his nickname due to service in the Philippines as a soldier in the U.S. Army. After enlisting in the Marine Corps, he became the only enlisted Marine in World War II to have received the Medal of Honor, the Navy Cross and a Purple Heart. Before his heroic actions on Iwo Jima, he married Marine Sgt. Lena Mea Riggi. Riggi later christened the USS Basilone, which was named in honor of her late husband.

A common tradition among Marines is to say, "Good night, Chesty, wherever you are." Lewis Burwell Puller received his nickname because of a physical attribute. His big barrel chest, for which

With the holidays rapidly approaching, spreading cheer may be on the minds of many. However, if someone on your shopping list is overseas there are important tips to keep in mind.

Before you prep a package for delivery, the United States Postal Service and the Department of Defense offer some restrictions of items that should not be sent to deployed troops in Operation Iraqi Freedom. Obscene articles or items of a pornographic nature should not be sent forward. Also, numerous religious items contrary to the Islamic belief should not be in a package. Religious items for personal use are ok. Pork items or pork products also should be left out of a box being sent. Specific Army Post Office and Fleet Post Office have their own restrictions. For more information on hand items call Military Postal Service Agency 1 (800) 810-6098.

Once items to be delivered have been chosen, packaging is key in successful transport of the package. Select a strong box with extra room for padding. Bubble or Styrofoam wrap items. If an item is particularly fragile, then double-box it and use padding in between the two boxes. Battery powered equipment may become turned on during shipment, so remove batteries and wrap them individually. Seal the package with 2 inch wide tape and ensure all seams are covered. Don't use twine, cord or rope to seal a package.

The DoD also has guidelines for addressing a package. Use the person's full name. All mail must be addressed to someone specific. Include the unit and APO/FPO. Only family members and friends are aloud to send mail and packages to service members. For the APO/FPO for your military member, contact your local Family Readiness Officer. Include a return address.

If you don't have a family or friend overseas, there are other ways to send troops your care. The United Service Organization facilitates the operation USO care package program. Individuals can sponsor a care package and send a personal message. For more information visit www.OperationUSOCarePackage.org.

Another way to send a gift forward is to donate blood. Blood is always in demand and vital to our forward troops.

Weather you box up some eatable goodies or send a favorite book, taking care to follow some simple tips may bring deployed service members some holiday joy. ■ mass donation of toys for unfortunate families. His wife took over the task when he passed away last month.

"We all miss Michael, but Phyllis handles the responsibilities with ease," said John Mitchell, a member of the Twin Rivers Corvette Club from Merritt, N.C. "This is my fourth year and I can't imagine myself anywhere else at this time."

Even though some club member's Corvettes were in the shop, they still attended for the cause of helping others. Thousands of dollars in toys and food were donated in hopes to bring joy to the homes of those who fight for our country.

"This is only my first year in the club and supporting the Michael Casey Memorial Toy Run, but I am looking forward to many more years," said Chuck Barner, a member of the Myrtle Beach Corvette Club.

To attract more Corvette enthusiasts and helpful citizens, those who attended the toy run had the oppor-

he was named, must have come in handy when displaying his numerous awards including five Navy Crosses and a Purple Heart. Even though he is famous for saying, "Take me to the Brig. I want to see real Marines" he also received a good conduct medal with a Bronze Star in lieu of second award.

Another famous recipient of the Purple Heart and nickname is Gen. Holland M. Smith. Not known for being the bashful type, 'Howlin' Mad Smith used his voice to pioneer modern amphibious warfare. He was also known for his distinguished involvement in the Wood campaign. He later retired and resided in California. A couple of Marines were walking through his neighborhood one weekend and noticed a beautiful bed of roses in Smith's yard. One of the Marines commented, "Howlin' Mad Smith grew the roses for the thorns, not the blossoms."

According to legend, Victor H. Krulak, only 5 feet, 4 inches, wanted in to the U.S. Naval Academy so badly he took the brutal measure of hitting himself on the head. "Brute" Krulak hoped the bump produced would help qualify him for the height requirement. It must have worked as he graduated from the academy in 1934 and was commissioned as an officer in the Marine Corps. Krulak fought in World War II, Korea and Vietnam. He is also the fa-any hazardous material, and they remove their protective gear before making contact with the rest of the team. Medical personnel check for any physical problems that may have occurred during the search.

The secondary team enters and extracts the material, and properly disposes of it. Once the area is safe, they follow the same procedures as the primary team mission is accomplished.

"These firefighters put their personal lives on the line to protect those who serve America," said Zurek.

If a suspicious package is found in your vicinity, don't hesitate to call 911 and let the local fire department take charge. "We're working and protecting our community. It's our job," he concluded.

Clean up: Firefighters scrub and spray one of their own after coming in contact with simulated hazardous materials during the training exercise.

Third party ticketing on or off base

Officers and staff noncommissioned officers who observe unsafe driving behavior among suspected Marines and sailors on or off base are expected to report such behavior using the following procedures:

1. Do not commit unsafe/unlawful acts to get a license plate or vehicle description.
 2. Record the vehicle license plate, state, vehicle description, driver description, alleged traffic offense, time and location.
 3. Use the following Web site to submit your complaint: <http://www.lejeune.usmc.mil/mcb/3rdparty.pdf>. The POC for all complaints is Master Sgt. Scott Coyle.
 4. Provost Marshal's Office will use this information to take appropriate action.
- We appreciate your willingness to participate in ensuring base safety.

Not just drunk driving, impaired driving kills

Sgt. T.D. Smith
Marine Corps Base

Marines and sailors have already begun to revel in the holiday spirit, and for some that may include activities that impair one's ability to drive. Driving while impaired can have deadly effects and terminate a service member's career.

"It's easy to get caught up in celebrations during the holiday season, and too often our culture considers alcohol a necessary ingredient to having a good time," said Maj. Gen. Robert C. Dickerson, commanding general, Marine Corps Installations East. "Leaders at all levels really need to reinforce that their Marines think long and hard about the potentially fatal consequences of driving while impaired. It pains me, and to a greater extent their families, to think 15 of our Marines did not plan ahead and paid for those decisions with their lives."

To make proper plans to prevent impaired driving, several things need to be factored in. Alcohol and drugs are two major factors, but there are other things that affect one's driving ability.

"Alcohol and drugs are not the only things that can impair your driving," said Jordan L. Pickett, safety manager, MCIEAST. "Going without sleep or not getting enough rest can affect your judgment and reduce your response time. There is no substitute for sleep; coffee, loud music, rolling the window down doesn't help. The bottom line is, if you are tired, you need to stop. If you've been drinking, don't drive."

Those who do not plan properly and are charged with driving while impaired stand to face serious consequences. Legal repercussions can affect service members on base and out in town.

"(On base) drivers who are cited and found guilty of an impaired driving offense are subject to mandatory suspensions or revocation of their base driving privileges for one year or more. Additionally, the Base Traffic Court office will forward their court records to the Department of Motor Vehicle's office for the state the driver was licensed. This could lead to additional punishment in the form of fines, fees, court costs and license suspension, said Lt. Col. Marc H. Lambert, provost marshal office

HOLIDAY SAFETY

Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune. Pickett explained legal problems aren't the only troubles impaired driving can cause. "Clearly the most dangerous repercussion is having an accident and killing yourself, your passengers and other motorists, not to mention the loss of productivity at work. If you're dead or seriously injured, it affects unit readiness and combat readiness. It simply reduces the Marine Corps' effectiveness on the battlefield."

Service members aboard Camp Lejeune can ensure they and their peers don't incur the hardships that stem from driving impaired Pickett noted, "The key to prevention is small unit leadership. Leaders educating their Marines. Marines using positive peer pressure on one another. Marines looking out for one another and leaders holding Marines accountable for their actions."

Dickerson added, "There are always alternatives to getting behind the wheel after drinking, and Marines need to plan ahead for that possibility before alcohol starts clouding their judgment. Designated drivers, taxis, the local bus service and unit Arrive Alive cards are all safe, viable options for those who have been drinking. Use them and prevent these absolutely unnecessary tragedies from occurring on our roadways. Always remember, I would rather have you back late, then not at all." ■

CAMP LEJEUNE WATER STUDY

Camp Lejeune Water Study

If you lived or worked on Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune between 1957 and 1987, you may have been exposed to contaminated drinking water.

The United States Marine Corps encourages all those who resided on the base prior to register at the official Camp Lejeune water study website to receive updated information and actions regarding the ongoing water study.

The Agency for Toxic Substance and Disease Registry (ATSDR), a federal public health agency, is conducting this study to determine whether any potential health risks are associated with exposure to the impacted drinking water. The projected completion of the study is expected mid-2008. At that time the Marine Corps will notify former residents with the results.

Trader ads submissions cannot be accepted by phone, guard mail, or fax, as these means are reserved for official business only.

Traders is a free service provided by the Public Affairs Office and submitted by active duty and retired military personnel and their dependents, and civilian personnel aboard Camp Lejeune and MCAS New River. Ads must be submitted each week and reach the Public Affairs Office by noon Thursday for the following week's publication. Ads should be submitted on a Trader form, available here at the Public Affairs Office. Ads are reserved for the exchange or sale of personal services or businesses may not be printed. The Public Affairs Office reserves the right to withhold ads that may be deemed inappropriate for any reason. Official phone numbers CANNOT be listed.

Limit is three ads per week. If the Public Affairs Office receives more ads than space permits, certain ads may not be published until the following week.

The joy of cooking

Heather Owens
Carolina Living editor

The master chef of her time, Julia Child once said, "Find something you're passionate about and keep tremendously interested in it."

For a group of more than 70 students at Lejeune High School, passion is about creating masterpieces of texture and taste through culinary arts and a scrumptious dining atmosphere through courteous service.

"It's not only preparing these kids for culinary careers, but it is going to prepare these kids for life, because you have to eat, and these kids know how to cook," said LHS teacher Shirley Bryan, who has been teaching the culinary arts at the school for six years, on the importance of the award-winning program.

Last year, culinary students received first place in management and second place in culinary arts at the National Students Invitational of the Carolina's cooking competition in Myrtle Beach, S.C., and they hope to repeat the feat this year. In fact, they are already working on a couple dishes they may prepare during the competition.

Students have the option to complete three levels of culinary arts training at the school, said Bryan. In the first level, they learn basic sanitation, safety, the art of applying herbs and spices, use of temperature and knife cuts. For the second level, the student's education goes more in depth with study on how to make soup stocks from scratch. In level three, the young chefs actually intern at restaurants out in the community.

Mary Anderson, 16, said she has developed a passion for cooking through the course. "I've started checking out cookbooks and I'm thinking about taking it up in college," said Anderson.

Another part of the young people's education is their quarterly restaurant practice. Last week, the level one students hosted a luncheon for various school officials and members of the community. Students were responsible for running the café from soup to nuts. They filled roles such as host, dining captain, server and chef.

Guests were treated to a fresh

'Martian Child:' romantic drama with a twist

From the front row with

Reinhold Moldenhauer Huneycutt

Playing at the Camp Lejeune Theater

"MARTIAN CHILD" (PG)

"Martian Child" is a romantic drama with a twist of science fiction about a man becoming a father and a boy becoming a son.

John Cusack ("Must Love Dogs," "The Ice Harvest," "Runaway Jury") stars as David Gordon, an eccentric science fiction writer, who wants to adopt a child and struggles to fight the system as a single adoptive parent.

Heartbroken and desperate after the death of his wife, David decides to adopt a 6-year-old boy to fill the void in his life.

But he gets more than he bargained for when Dennis, the emotionally troubled young child, played by Bobby Coleman, insists he is an alien and has arrived from Mars.

Dennis, a really weird kid, has an intense and odd fantasy life and exhibits some pretty strange behavior. He really believes he is from another planet.

As the two bond, David starts to suspect Dennis may be telling the truth, when a series of strange occurrences happen.

Amanda Peet ("Something's Gotta Give," "The Whole Ten Yards," "A Lot Like Love") costars as Harlee, a close and sympathetic friend to David.

The two ignore some serious parenting advice from David's sister, Liz, a typical and very practical suburban mother, played by Joan Cusack ("Friends with Money," "Ice Princess," "Raising Helen"), and who thinks that her brother is getting in way over his head.

Also appearing are Oliver Platt ("Casanova," "Don't Say a Word") as Jeff, David's nervous agent and Angelica Huston as the ever-demanding publisher; Richard Schiff ("I Am Sam," "Ray") as the social worker Leftkowitz; and Sophie Okonedo ("Hotel Rwanda," "Alibi") as Sophie, the director of a children's group home.

Director Menno Meyjes ("Max"), who also helped write the screenplay, adapted this story from the short story "The Martian Child: A Novel About a Single Father Adopting a Son" by David Gerrold.

"Martian Child" is a touching story with a lot of heart, showing the powerful love between parent and child, about a widower who adopts a highly unusual young boy who doesn't fit in.

Playing at the Midway Park Theater

"BEE MOVIE" (PG)

"Bee Movie" is an animated film and comedy that will change everything you know about bees.

The story line centers on a bee who decides to sue all humans after finding out they actually eat the honey all bees work so hard to make.

Jerry Seinfeld lends his voice to Barry B. Benson, a Central Park drone who just graduated from college. He is disillusioned by his only career choice — making honey.

On a rare trip outside of his hive, Barry's life is saved by Vanessa Bloome, voiced by Renee Zellweger ("Shrek Tale"), a florist in New York City. Barry falls for Vanessa, who is human and much bigger in size than a bee.

Their friendly relationship blossoms and Barry soon discovers humans are mass consumers of honey. He is shocked and appalled to see how the people treat the bees and consume their honey. He decides to sue the human race for stealing bees' honey.

'Martian Child:' This drama stars Bobby Coleman as Dennis, a 6-year-old boy who believes he is from another planet. Dennis is adopted science fiction writer, David Gordon, played by John Cusack.

Chris Rock ("Madagascar") voices Mooseblood, the mosquito who is on his way to a more simple life. He meets Barry while landing on the windshield of his car and they become buddies.

Matthew Broderick ("The Lion King") plays Barry's best bee buddy, Adam Flayman.

Among the many celebrities who lend their star voices are John Goodman, Patrick Warburton, Ray Liotta, Rip Torn, Megan Mullally, Barry Levinson, Kathy Bates, Oprah Winfrey, Uma Thurman, Alan Arkin, Robert Duvall, William H. Macy, Larry King and Sting.

Directors Stephen Hickner ("The Prince of Egypt") and Simon Smith teamed up to bring this funny animated buddy tale, written and produced by Jerry Seinfeld and backed by Steven Spielberg, to the big screen.

"Bee Movie" is a moving, very sweet and funny animated fable that can be enjoyed by the entire family.

Playing at the Jacksonville Theater

"NO COUNTRY FOR OLD MEN" (R)

"No Country for Old Men" is a grisly Texas crime thriller.

Set in the modern-day Rio Grande around 1980, the story centers on a bloody hunt among thieves for $2 million.

The film brings together three characters operating in the so-called no-man's land on the Texas-Mexico border, where there are no rules and the drug traffic runs rampant.

Tommy Lee Jones ("Rules of Engagement," "The Missing," "The Fugitive") stars as Ed Tom Bell, the decent but disillusioned and world-weary sheriff chasing a merciless killer.

Javier Bardem ("Before Night Falls," "Love in the Time of Cholera") stars as Anton Chigurh, the terrifying and evil outlaw who roams the border cities of Texas. The sadistic and monstrous killer, a true psychopath, in turn is pursuing a good old Texas boy.

James Brolin ("American Gangster," "Hollow Man") costars as Llewelyn Moss, the lone cowboy and hunter who finds the bloody remains of a drug shootout and who makes off with a fortune in drug money.

It sets off a chain of events that is the core of this movie.

Supporting roles are provided by Woody Harrelson ("North Country") as Carson Wells, the bounty hunter; Kelly MacDonald ("Nanny McPhee") as Carla Jean, the lovely wife of Moss; and Tess Harper ("The Jackal") as Loretta Bell.

This terrific crime drama was created by the talented Coen Brothers ("Fargo," "Blood Simple," "Barton Fink," "Miller's Crossing"), who produced, directed and provided the screenplay.

The screenplay has been adapted from the 2005 best-selling novel by Cormac McCarthy. The script left out two very dramatic set pieces and severely condensed the storyline; however, the Coen Brothers come through again and deliver a powerful and thought provoking crime thriller.

The fast-paced movie was mostly filmed in New Mexico and presents masterful performances and an outstanding quality of filmmaking.

"No Country For Old Men" is a suspenseful, haunting and ultra-violent thriller.

"AUGUST RUSH" (PG)

"August Rush" is a beautiful drama about the performing arts.

The story focuses on an orphaned musical prodigy who uses his gift of music to find his birth parents.

Freddie Highmore ("A Good Year," "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory," "Finding Neverland") plays August Rush, an unusual, gifted child who is being raised in an orphanage.

Born with the gift to hear music all around him, he truly believes he will find his parents if they only could hear his music.

Determined to search for them, he makes his way to New York City, unaware his parents are also looking for him.

There he finds shelter with a group of homeless kids who are playing for change on the streets under the protection of a man called the Wizard, played by Rufus Williams ("License to Wed," "The Next Listener," "RV"), a man who actually plights these street urchins.

Keri Russell ("Waitress," "The Upstairs of Anger," "Mission Impossible III") stars as Lyla Novacek, a brilliant classical pianist who just finished performing in New York City.

One evening, while out at a party with her friends, she meets Louis Connelly, an Irish guitar player and rock 'n' roller played by the dashing Jonathan Rhys Meyers ("Match Point," "Alexander").

Sharing the love for music, they bond instantly and spend a romantic night together. Special circumstances, however, keep them apart even though Lyla is pregnant with their child.

When Lyla is in a terrible car accident, she believes she lost her child. However she finds out later that her father, played by Will Sadler ("The Green Mile") gave the baby for adoption.

Both Lyla and Louis go on with their lives on separate paths, but shy away from the beloved music until they finally realize recapturing their music reconnects them at the end.

Terrence Howard ("The Brave New World," "Crash," "Pride") costars as Richard Jeff, the kind and concerned social worker.

Director Kirsten Sheridan ("Disco Pigs," "Patterns") put this emotional film together with the help of music that is the common thread that holds this story together.

The story line with all its fantasies and strong hints of "Oliver" and "Peter Pan" is filled with a sweet romantic scenario.

"August Rush" is a masterpiece, with superbly perfecting their talents by singing and playing instruments.

The movie is a touching and emotionally inspirational piece that might not appeal to everyone, but captures the power of music perfectly.

Festival of Trees brings Christmas joy

Hannah Evans

Christmas spirit: The Festival of Trees, an annual fundraiser of the Onslow Caregivers, Inc., was held Saturday and Sunday at the Jacksonville Fairgrounds. The event received scores of visitors and raised money for the non-profit charity, which helps county patients in home health care and hospice programs. At top, a tree by the Military Order of the Purple Heart honored Purple Heart recipients. At left, Maj. Gen. Robert C. Dickerson, commanding general of Marine Corps Installations East, took time out of his busy schedule to stop by and encourage volunteers, such as Marge Cushman. Above, Hannah Evans and her sister Amelia, daughters of Navy Lt. Trish Corkhill, the division officer of labor and delivery at Naval Hospital Camp Lejeune, pose with Santa at the event's "country store" area.

Hildreth.

Military families are scheduled to receive an early Christmas surprise Monday when the Christmas Spirit Foundation and FedEx deliver 800 real Christmas trees to Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune as part of the "Trees for Troops" program.

The distribution will take place between the commissary and Marine Corps Exchange starting at 10 a.m. Wynn Hildreth, operations officer for Marine Corps Community Services, said active duty and retired military members and their families are eligible to receive trees at no cost to themselves. He said there are enough trees to go around and requested recipients not start to line up at the pick up location prior to 9:30 a.m. To receive a tree, one must bring a valid military identification card.

"Installation Security and Safety has assisted in developing a traffic flow pattern so the traffic will go into the Main Exchange parking lot and be directed around the commissary to pick up their tree and then drive safely away," said

"With the strong volunteers from the Single Marine Program, we are able to load the trees faster so the line does not move quickly," said Hildreth.

Susan Goodrich, coordinator for the Single Marine Program, is in charge of supplying the SMP volunteers.

Approximately 15 to 20 SMP volunteers will be on hand to load trees into the waiting vehicles. "Volunteering is a huge part of this program, so to give our Marines an opportunity to just give back to the community and see the faces of the families which receive the trees is just an added benefit," said Goodrich, adding, "By far, this is one of the most fun events that I participate in during the year."

Goodrich, who participated in the event last year, said "it's unbelievable how beautiful the trees are." She added the Christmas Spirit Foundation delivers more than 15,000 real Christmas trees from 27 states across the nation to military members and their families.

December 8, 1941 ... beginning a long journey into harm's way

Hank Phillips
Special to The Globe

Some 66 years ago this week, a 17-year-old Winston-Salem boy joined the Marines. Following the deadly attack on Pearl Harbor, Claude C. Kiger, like thousands of others around the country, was eager to join the fight. All too soon they would become battle-hardened men. Following graduation from boot camp, Kiger boarded a train for Jacksonville, N.C. Final destination: "Tent City," where eight men were assigned to each tent.

In February 1942, Kiger boarded a train while a band played "California Here We Come." He quickly figured out where the train was headed. "Harvey girls gave us great sandwiches at stops all along the way. For a North Carolina boy who had never been anywhere, I was having a great time," he said.

Soon he boarded a ship which took him to the South Pacific. At Wellington, New Zealand, the Second Marine Division was forming up and Kiger was assigned to the 2nd Battalion, Sixth Marines. His unit landed on Guadalcanal in December. While the beaches had already been secured, there were Japanese soldiers still hiding. "They would come close to our lines at night and yell in good English, 'Hey, Joe, what d'ya know, you gonna die tonight.' We went through a Banzai attack one night. It was the worst time I ever had."

After "the Canal," Tiger's unit returned to Wellington. There, he was issued a new M-1 rifle. He was in a contest to break down and put together the parts of his rifle — blindfolded. Kiger won. His lieutenant wanted him to take the test for private first class. "I passed. I was now an 18-year-old squad leader," he said.

In November 1943, Kiger's regiment boarded ships and headed for Tarawa. "The second wave, of which I was part, headed to shore in Higgins boats. My boat ran onto coral, and we had to go over the side, still a few hundred yards from the only 20-yard-wide beach. I was able to walk on my tiptoes, barely, toward the beach. My buddy and I had to push a body aside, floating in the water on the way to the beach. I lost my pack during the landing. That first day, it was all we could do to hang on. Anything that moved got shot at. I fired off six or seven clips during the night.

On Day 2, Kiger was shot in his hand. He crawled to the beach where he found a medic by a pile of dead bodies. "The medic took one look at my hand and said he'd have to cut it off. I said 'No!' I was transported to the hospital ship USS Hope offshore where I was treated. Then I was sent to Hawaii for further examination," he remembered. While recovering, Marine Col. David Shoup, a future Marine commandant, pinned a Purple Heart on him.

Next, Saipan. "15 June, 1944 was to be a brutal day. We went in on amtracs. I got sea-sick. Our amtrac got hit. Out of 39 Marines, everyone was killed except three of us. Saipan was horrible! One night while I was sleeping, my mate woke me up. We saw a shadow stepping over our hole. Three Japanese stepped across and we let them go. The next night we had five foxholes filled and ready for them. They came again and we opened up. We killed twenty enemy soldiers." On 7 July, a "climactic moment" for the Japanese on Saipan, 4,311 of the enemy were killed while in a Banzai attack.

Straight from Saipan, Kiger embarked for Tinian. While on Tinian, he came down with malaria. Given the chance to rotate back to the States, he refused.

He stayed with his outfit for one more invasion — his fifth — Okinawa. "When we arrived off Okinawa, I gave my watch and money — about $200 — to a sailor and boarded an amtrac. While the boats were forming up, I got seasick again. Shells were flying everywhere when we headed toward the beaches. But after a few minutes, we headed back to the ship." It turned out that his unit conducted a diversionary action and didn't make a landing. "The easiest battle star I ever won," he said.

Kiger's long journey into harm's way which began on December 8, 1941, was drawing to a close. After more than 42 months overseas, he returned to North Carolina with five battle stars, re-enlisted, and became a Marine recruiter. While on duty one day, now Sgt. Kiger met a lovely young girl, Catherine, who became his wife in 1946. They have been married for sixty-one years and have made Wilmington, N.C., home for 35 years. "I don't know how I would have made it without her," he said.

At the recent Marine Corps Birthday Ball in Wilmington, "Tiger" Kiger pulled from his pocket to show me a small brown stone. "I picked this up on Guadalcanal. It's been my good luck charm for 65 years," he said. If that rock could only talk.

This week, when we recall the deadly attack on Pearl Harbor, many of us are reminded of the countless acts of courage demonstrated by men and women of "The Greatest Generation" — some we know, like "Tiger" Kiger; some we've only heard about or read about. In the Pacific, Europe, Africa and in other distant places they served. They made a difference. They proudly protected the freedoms we now enjoy, in the last big war we ever won.

Editor's note: Phillips lives in Wilmington. He served as a Marine officer from 1959-1962, and was founder and first Commandant of Cape Fear Detachment 1070, Marine Corps League. Phillips' great-great uncle, John Harris, was the sixth Commandant of the Marine Corps. ■

Eagle Scout Project

Boy Scout builds fences for Hope for the Warriors

Robin Kelleher

Team work: Approximately 35 people showed up to build privacy fences at Warriors Houses I and II Saturday. Their work was spearheaded by Coleman Fuquea, son of a deployed Marine and Boy Scout on the path to Eagle Scout.

Heather Owens
Carolina Living editor

As Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote, it is imperative for the successful person to "not go where the path may lead, but to instead go where there is no path and leave a trail."

One teenager living aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune has been blazing a trail since early this year when he decided to embark on the trail to Eagle Scout.

At just 15 years old, Coleman Fuquea, a sophomore at Lejeune High School, started early on the project most young men do not complete until they are at least 17. To become an Eagle Scout, a young man must earn at least 21 merit badges, achieve all of the ranks possible as a Boy Scout and demonstrate leadership in a service project totaling at least 100 hours. It is an achievement only 2.5 percent of Boy Scouts obtain, according to Wikipedia.

The idea for the project was seeded when the young man made the decision to assist the non-profit organization Hope for the Warriors improve the livability of Warrior Houses I and II on Seth Williams Boulevard. "When the Hope for the Warriors first started, we stopped by and just asked if they needed anything. They said, yeah, they would really like to have someone build these fences and that's how it got started," said Fuquea.

Staff members at Hope for the Warriors, which assists service members and their families nationwide who have been adversely affected by injuries or death in the line of duty, had a wish list that included the construction of wooden privacy fences for the houses. The fences were to enhance the safety aspect and privacy factor of the two homes, used to house visiting family members of Wounded Warriors and facilitate a more intimate reunion with the Wounded Warrior.

Fuquea began laying the groundwork for his plan by finding a sponsor. "Coleman reached out to the Home Depot and said he was trying to facilitate some supplies for his Eagle Scout project. Home Depot thought it was a great thing to do because it supports the Wounded Warriors on Camp Lejeune," said Kenya Miles, store manager of the Jacksonville Home Depot.

Dwana Salter, commercial sales department head at Home Depot, spearheaded the company's participation in the event. She put Fuquea in touch with Andy Treece and Holly Ridge of Andy's Fence to help provide fence building expertise to the project.

Next, Fuquea put together a 40-page packet outlining his plan to present to the district Eagle Scout board.

After working on project details each day for nine months, Fuquea's plans came together Saturday when approximately 35 people showed up to build the fences. Members of Fuquea's Boy Scout Troop 597 of Northwood Methodist Church, plus two fellow LHS students from Boy Scout Troop 490, Marines from the Wounded Warrior Battalion East, Home Depot and Andy's Fence employees and other community members joined together in the effort.

Fuquea captained the effort, answering questions, leading the younger scouts, ensuring each volunteer followed the proper safety procedures and problem-solving all the way. He had previously garnered support from Dunkin' Donuts, Chic-Fil-a, Coca-Cola and Subway, who each provided food to feed the volunteers throughout the day-long build.

Cpl. Eric Ochoa, of Wounded Warrior Battalion East, helped dig fence-post holes. "Hope for the Warriors gives a lot to us and I took it as giving a little in return," said Ochoa of why he decided to assist with the build.

The Wounded Warrior Company Commander, Capt. Elizabeth Harreschou, was also on hand to help out. She expressed the importance of the Wounded Warriors' participation in the project. "It's good for them to work with the Boy Scouts, because they are passing on a good work ethic," she said.

Sofia Schwartz, Hope for the Warriors team coordinator, worked with Fuquea on the project details. "[The fences] provide a little safety if there are little kids staying in the houses — sometimes parents can't always watch kids 100 percent of the time, especially if they are injured," said Schwartz on the importance of the fences. "It just provides a little extra protection."

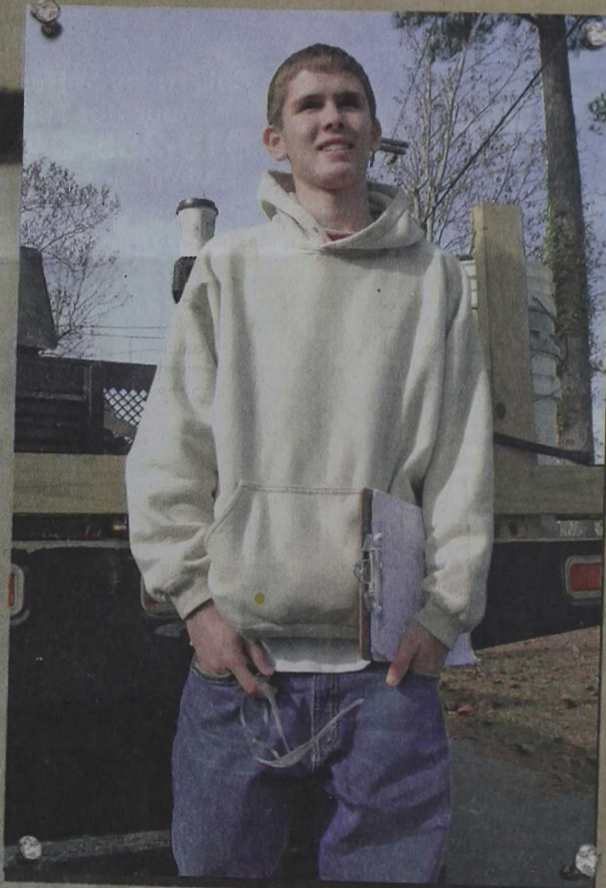

Fuquea's parents understood the momentousness of the day as the culmination of months of planning. "Today, I pulled up and thought 'oh, my goodness, he's finally going to do this,'" said Fuquea's mother, Susan. "His father and I are just incredibly proud of him. His dad called from Iraq today to tell him how proud he is and he wished he was here."

As for Fuquea himself, he was most pleased his many months of planning paid off. "It feels really good to do something for someone that's not yourself and to see it all come together," he said.

Now that the project is complete, Fuquea will compile another package describing his project and the obstacles he overcame to achieve his goal. He hopes to receive his Eagle Scout award in February or March after his dad returns from service in Iraq.

Fuquea said he especially wanted to thank his mom "because she pushed me to do this, biting at my heels all the way to be sure I did what I was supposed to do. And I mean that all in a good way," he said with a mix of humor and gratitude. Then he added, "I'm just really glad it's all done and everyone came out and helped today."

In the end, Fuquea's trail to Eagle Scout was one that sends a message of gratitude to Wounded Warriors and will leave a lasting legacy. "It was an amazingly impressive effort. The end result was not only professional but the intention behind this young man's endeavor is a gift that will inspire and be shared by countless families in a time of tragedy," said Robin Kelleher, president of Hope for the Warriors. ■

Bright future: Fuquea, 15, has the leadership skills of someone twice his age. He managed the fence building project from start to finish.

wise, they say we are a generation that understands military participation as "something like a choice to take up bungee jumping — a bad idea for many, but okay for those sorts of people into that sort of thing."

In other words, military service is okay for everyone else, just not my kid.

When I originally read the book, I never would have seen myself as the kind of person who would agree with that statement. I would have sworn I'm nothing like the parents Roth-Douquet and Schaeffer talk about in their book. I actually know military people. I am part of a military family. My father, husband, three brothers and two brothers-in-law all served in the military either as officers or enlisted. I'm well aware that the children of military officers or senior enlisted are six times more likely to serve than their civilian counterparts and I've always kind of expected my kids would want to serve, too.

So if I'm so all-fired pro-military, why am I now the kind of person who secretly throws away those ads from the military — as if the ads themselves are so powerful they would lure Kelsey off her carefully chosen path?

When I confessed what I'd been doing to my daughter, she told me to cut it out. But she wasn't at all surprised at my behavior.

"You were the same way when I wanted to be a flight attendant in the third grade. You told me that if I wanted to be in the travel industry, I had to be a pilot instead."

"I said that?"

"Yeah. You say stuff like that all the time."

I knew she was right. I do still try to shape and mold and exclude things from her life. I don't do it overtly or even consciously, but I do crop out things I don't quite want for her. I do exclude possibilities that I see as even a little dangerous. And that is where I think I'm probably wrong. Military service has been the making of so many people we know. Am I now the kind of parent who is so overprotective of her that I'm throwing away the very opportunities that could be the making of her?

I turned to leave my daughter's room, but heard a voice behind me, pitched low and certain so that I would be sure to hear. "But you couldn't stop me if I really wanted to go." ■

Red Cross: 65 years and counting

Kelli Huffman

Dedicated volunteer: The American Red Cross office aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune celebrated 65 years serving on base this November, according to assistant station manager Tessa Gallagher. "We're very proud to be part of an organization whose main objective is to serve the U.S. military. We do so on a daily basis through delivering emergency messages and volunteer services. We look forward to being here and providing those services as long as the military needs us," said Gallagher. Above, Julia Houck, who will have been a Red Cross volunteer for 30 years this April, is pictured at the station's holiday party last Friday.

carefully slip four-color postcards from GoArmy and the National Guard out of my 17-year-old daughter's pile of mail. I fold the ads once, twice, three and slip them deep into the wettest part of the trash where she just won't ever get a glimpse of them.

Tell myself not to feel guilty. I tell myself that editing the Army or the National Guard out of my daughter's post-high school life is all part of the constant life process parents do with their kids.

It's so different from not letting her check out Babar from the library when she was five because I dressed up French elephants as boring?

It's so different from failing to point out the cheerleader sign-ups to her in the third grade and encouraging her to be a swimmer and a basketball player instead?

It's so different from dumping her Victoria's Secret catalog in our neighbor's bin on the way home from the store so she won't compare herself to women with breast implants?

Don't think so. But I am probably wrong. Last month authors Kathy Roth-Douquet and Frank Schaeffer wrote a whole book about how upper middle class girls are underrepresented in today's military. Instead of being military service as a duty to serve the way generations once did, Roth-Douquet and Schaeffer argued that our generation of parents sees the military as some kind of hawkish political choice or funky cultural statement. They say we can understand it as a choice for the economically disadvantaged who need a degree for college or a job after high school. But other-or chicken breast with lemon and sage. Each selection was served with a side of garlic mashed potatoes and buttered carrots à la tourne', which were styled with artistic flair.

For dessert, guests indulged in Snickers pie, with a home-made crust and coffee.

Sean Martin, 15, helped prepare the pie. "Over the summer, I just started cooking and making things. Then, I saw that we had a culinary arts class. It's fun and something I'm actually good at," said Martin.

After the meal, Jane Varalli, teacher of the introductory culinary arts class, said the students became close through their many hours working in the kitchen. "When students come in, they are normal students and then a miracle happens. They go from students in a class to a family," said Varalli.

The culinary students have also become close by working together to help others. Bryan said the students have prepared more than 2,000 cookies for single warriors returning from Iraq. Later in December, they will also make sweet treats to deliver to residents of local nursing homes.

Through the art of creation and helping others, the students are learning important life lessons. "These kids are very creative, they love cooking and, of course, they love to have people eat their food," said Bryan. ■

Aircraft static display provides hands on education to families

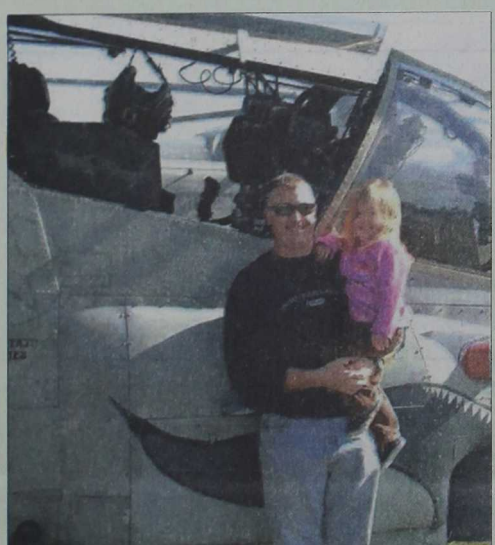

Sgt. Steven King
Marine Corps Community Services

There is an old Native American saying which goes, "Tell me and I'll forget. Show me and I may not remember. Involve me, and I'll understand." The staff at the Harriotte B. Smith Library understands there is something special about involvement that hastens the learning process. They put this understanding to work Nov. 17 when they hosted the aviation static display at W.P.T. Hill Field aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune.

Roughly 250 service members and their families gathered to learn about the CH-53 Super Stallion and the AH-1W Cobra on display in honor of National Aviation Week. Questions were asked, aircrafts were inspected and future dreams of flying were fostered as the children of service members eagerly huddled around the aircraft and gazed with eyes full of wonder.

The Harriotte B. Smith Library also hosted a paper airplane competition earlier in the day at the Area 4 Gymnasium in which prizes were awarded to the best airplane. "We're doing a lot more programs to show while the library is educational, it's also fun," said Jeanne Holmgren, Harriotte B. Smith staff aid.

The display was only one piece of a series of events that took place during both National Aviation Week and the Month of the Military Family. Other events included model airplane displays, family movie nights and a Veterans Appreciation Breakfast. Only a Marine Corps library would bring you such a creative twist to learning. ■

Prepare for your future at the John A. Lejeune Education Center

Sgt. Steven King
Marine Corps Community Services

Learning is a prerequisite of advancement, so it is with great enthusiasm that Marine Corps Community Services announces the John A. Lejeune Education Center — Lifelong Learning Education office and the university and college offices are now open at their new location.

Previously at Bldg. 202, Consolidated Education is now located at the John A. Lejeune Education Center, 825 Stone Street (Bldg. 825). The complex now houses the Education Center and six colleges: Boston University, Campbell University, Coastal Carolina Community College, Southern Illinois University Carbondale, University of North Carolina Wilmington and Webster University.

These institutions offer classes at the Education Center at every academic level. Classes including vocational and technical courses, pre-college, undergraduate and graduate courses as well as distance learning courses are available. The facility houses 39 classrooms, a study and research center and six computer labs. Wireless Internet service is accessible and there is also a video teleconferencing center with state of the art equipment.

The Education Center provides services to all base personnel including active-duty personnel, family members, retired service members, Department of Defense employees and civilians of the community. "The primary goals of the education program are to improve the competence of the active duty personnel, to assist their career progression and to contribute to the overall strength of the Marine Corps as well as to provide the e Camp Lejeune family and men of our civilian community an opportunity to attain their educational goals. This is truly the flagship education center for the Marine Corps equals any education center you find in the Department of Defense said Beverly Adams, lifelong learning deputy director.

For more information about Education Center call 451-5574 or visit www.mccslejeune.com/main.html. For more information concerning any of the colleges presented at the Education Center call 451-5574 for Boston University, 451-3097 for Campbell University, 451-2391 for Coastal Carolina Community College, 451-5575 for Southern Illinois University Carbondale, 451-5266 for University of North Carolina Wilmington and 451-5574 for Webster University. ■

Aboard for the Christmas Town Express

1st Sgt. Steven King
 Marine Corps Community Services
 "Everyone, come all to the Christmas Town Express at Terrace Youth Pavilion Saturday from noon to 1 p.m. Join Marine Corps Community Services along with Santa and Mrs. Claus in a breathtaking display of lights and decorations. Be sure to ignite the Christmas spirit in anyone. Thank the patriots they brought Santa and Mrs. Claus. We will be remembering military who are deployed for the holiday season. I am a retired Marine gunnery sergeant. My understanding of the holiday season without that special one," said Claus.

Children will have the opportunity to visit with Santa and give him their wish list. They may also write him a letter if they choose. "Last year I received more than 60 letters from the children who attended Christmas Town Express and I'm expecting more this year. Like last year, I will be sure to write everyone back. Please be sure to put your name and address on your letter or list so I can write back. It's a bit difficult to make a list and check it twice without the proper name and address," said Claus.
 Mrs. Claus has teamed up with Nancy Grabowski, manager of the Tarawa Terrace Youth Pavilion, and has arranged a variety of arts and games for the Christmas Town Express. Children will be able to go from one activity to another, bringing out their creativity and having fun. "This is an annual December event the Children Youth and Teens Branch look forward to hosting together that supports our military children and families. Families will have the opportunity to spend quality time together and create memories that will last a lifetime," said Grabowski.

 The Claus' have set the admission to the Christmas Town Express at the amount of either one unwrapped toy for Toy for Tots, a box of dried goods or one canned good per family. For more information, call 450-1422 / 8674 / 1687 or 451-1807. ■

Toys for Tots

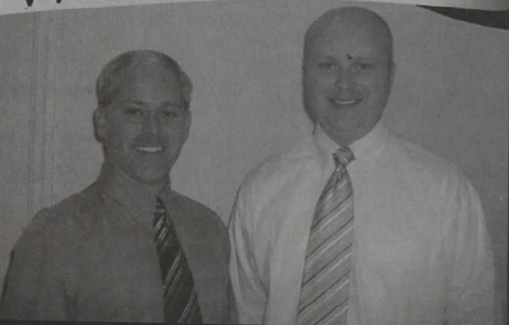

Dec. 14 is the last day toys will be accepted for the Toys for Tots toy drive program. There are more than 125 Toys for Tots drop-off locations in Onslow, Jones, Lenoir and Duplin Counties. Local drop-off sites include the Marine Corps Exchange and the MCX Annex aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune, Wal-Mart, Geoffrey's, K-Mart on NC-24 and Henderson Drive, Dollar General stores, Marine Federal Credit Union and the Navy Federal Credit Union. For more information, call 1st Sgt. Dwight D. Jones at 450-6698.

National Guard, Reserve members, families encouraged to nominate supportive employers

Press Release
 Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve
 The Department of Defense opened nomination season for the 2008 Secretary of Defense Employer Support Freedom Award Nov. 1. National Guard and Reserve members and their families are eligible and encouraged to nominate employers who have gone above and beyond in their support of military employees. Nominations will be accepted at www.esgr.mil through Dec. 21, 2008. The Secretary of Defense Employer Support Freedom Award is the U.S. government's highest recognition given to outstanding employers.
 The 2008 recipients will be announced in the spring and honored in Washington, D.C., at the 13th annual Secretary of Defense Employer Support Freedom Award ceremony Sept. 18, 2008. Recipients of the 2007 Freedom Award met with President George W. Bush, Vice President Richard Cheney and Secretary of Defense Robert M. Gates. Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. James Cartwright presented the awards at a ceremony attended by members of Congress and senior government and military officials.
 Almost one-half of the U.S. military is comprised of the National Guard and Reserve. The Department of Defense recognizes these citizen warriors with their civilian employers, many of whom provide significant support to their employees who serve in the National Guard and Reserve. Past recipients of the Freedom Award have provided full salary, continuation of benefits, care packages and even home and lawn care to families of employees fulfilling their military obligation.

 The Freedom Award was instituted in 1996 under the auspices of the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve to recognize exceptional support from the employer community.
 ESGR is a Department of Defense agency established in 1972. Its mission is to gain and maintain employer support for Guard and Reserve service by recognizing outstanding support, increasing awareness of the law and resolving conflicts through informal mediation.
 Previous Freedom Award recipients have included such large businesses as General Motors, Starbucks, Home Depot, American Express, Sears, General Electric, DuPont and United Parcel Service; state and local governments, including the State of Tennessee and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and small businesses including the family-owned Augustine & Sons farm in Rose Hill, Iowa, and Turbocam International.
 For questions regarding the nomination process, please contact Cmdr. Craig Kujawa at 703-696-1386, ext. 514. ■
