Training exercise: From the flightdeck of the USS Iwo Jima, Marines with the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit aboard a CH-53E Sea Knight fly off the ship on their way to Kuwait to begin a training exercise there.

24th MEU lands in Kuwait for training

Capt. David E. Nevers
24th Marine Expeditionary Unit

ABOARD USS IWO JIMA — Hundreds of Marines and sailors from the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit arrived in Kuwait Sunday, the initial wave in an amphibious landing that will bring the entire unit ashore for several weeks of desert training.

The Marines moved inland by helicopters and air-cushioned landing craft dispatched from three naval vessels in the Arabian Gulf: Amphibious assault ships Iwo Jima, Whidbey Island and Nashville.

The MEU will take advantage of Kuwait's expansive training ranges to fire the full array of its individual and crew-served weapons, from small arms and heavy machine guns to mortars and heavy artillery. Marines from the MEU's ground combat element and logistics arm will practice countering improvised explosive devices and responding to ambushes, while pilots and crew from the MEU's air combat element will hone their skills in providing close-air and deep-strike support.

The exercise in Kuwait is the latest in a series of maneuvers the MEU has conducted since its deployment began in June.

The MEU's first stop was in Jordan in early July. The unit's 2,200 Marines and sailors spent a week training alongside Jordanian forces before the exercise was cut short by the summer's crisis in nearby Lebanon.

When fighting broke out on July 12 between Israel and the militant group Hezbollah, the MEU raced to Lebanon to assist in the departure of some 15,000 Americans caught in the crossfire. The MEU remained off shore in the Mediterranean Sea until Aug. 20, when it returned to the Central Command area of operations.

After four days of training in the East African nation of Djibouti in late August, the MEU made its way across the Arabian Sea to Pakistan, where it spent 10 days in September supporting a bilateral exercise with Pakistani naval forces.

Commanded by Col. Ron Johnson, the 24th MEU is the landing force for the Iwo Jima Expeditionary Strike Group. The MEU consists of its command element; Battalion Landing Team 1st Battalion, 8th Marine Regiment; Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 365 (Reinforced); and MEU Service Support Group 24. ■

Hispanic Heritage Month recognized

Cpl. Joel Abshier
2nd Marine Logistics Group

Hispanic Heritage Month is a period recognizing Hispanic Americans and their contributions within the Hispanic culture and heritage.

Sept. 15 was chosen as the beginning of the Hispanic Heritage Month because it is the anniversary of independence from Spain, in 1821, of five Latin American countries: El Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Guatemala and Honduras. Additionally, Mexico and Chile declared their independence from Spain in 1810 on Sept. 16 and 18, respectively.

The Hispanic appreciation month began as a week-long event during 1968, however, in 1988 President Ronald Reagan extended that to cover a 30-day period starting on Sept. 15 and ending Oct. 15.

The number of United States residents, ages five and older, who speak Spanish at home has grown to more than 31 million, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Spanish speakers constitute a ratio of more than 1-in-10 U.S. household residents, making the Hispanic culture a growing part of the country.

"The culture is becoming very prominent in this country and this month will hopefully open the eyes of individuals who stereotype or generalize the Hispanic culture," said Sgt. Fernando Frias Jr., a combat photographer with Combat Logistics Regiment 27, 2nd Marine Logistics Group. "This month gives everyone an opportunity to look into the Hispanic culture more."

Vets of '83 Beirut bombing view current ops with pride, resolve

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Watching TV coverage of Marines from their former unit helping Americans leave Beirut churns up a host of emotions for former Marines who served there when a barracks was bombed in October 1983.

Randy Gaddo was a Marine staff sergeant with the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit serving in Lebanon when a terrorist attack in the early morning hours of Oct. 23, 1983, claimed the lives of 241 U.S. Marines, sailors and soldiers. Hundreds more were wounded or disabled when a truck laden with the equivalent of 20,000 pounds of TNT detonated on the ground floor of the 1st Battalion, 8th Marine Regiment,

Battalion Landing Team, barracks. Four days after the attack, then-U.S. President Ronald Reagan praised the fallen troops for their sacrifice in helping bring a better future to the people of Lebanon. "We cannot and will not dishonor them ... and the sacrifices they've made by failing to remain as faithful to the cause of freedom and the pursuit of peace they have been," Reagan said in a broadcast to the American people.

Recently, Gaddo and his former boss in Beirut, retired Maj. Bob Jordan, juggled their emotions as they watched televised images of Marines and sailors making good on that promise. Marines returned to Beirut the week of July 21 for the first time in more than 20 years to help U.S. citizens caught in the crossfire between Hezbollah terrorists and Israeli air and artillery forces.

A letter from the commanding general

Columbus Day is more than a commemoration of one daring man's discovery of a brave new world; it marks the first time America was brought to the attention of the civilized world. That historic moment in 1492 ultimately ushered in an influx of new ideas and achievements of Aristotle, Galileo and Newton and the thousands of thinkers, writers and inventors who followed.

This national holiday also honors the many contributions of millions of Italian-Americans who have had a significant influence on every aspect of America's culture, be it art, music, law, or politics.

Thousands of Marines who share this proud heritage are now serving courageously in the Global War on Terror and many have made the ultimate sacrifice in defense of freedom throughout our nation's history. Gunnery Sgt. John Basilone's legendary actions on Iwo Jima still stand as a testament to the fortitude of so many Italian-Americans who have died for this country.

As we pause to reflect and recharge on this well-deserved holiday, it is imperative that we as leaders and individuals take an active role in preventing the unnecessary loss of the Marine Corps' most valuable asset — our people.

Driving safely is not hard. Follow the rules. Don't drive too far. Plan to drive during the day when you are alert. Watch out for the other guy. Do not mix alcohol and driving. Buckle up. When operating a motorcycle, wear your protective and reflective gear. When around the water, use the buddy system. Know your limitations. Pause to consider what could go wrong, then take preventive action. Celebrate the national holiday, but act sensibly when doing so.

Leaders, know your people, their travel plans and ensure they know and plan for potential risks. Each Marine, sailor and civilian employee is a vital contributor to the mission within MCI EAST and your safe return is of the utmost importance. Enjoy your time off and remember, I'd rather have you back late than not at all.

Avoiding, dealing with identity theft

Press Release
Provost Marshal Office

Identity theft has become one of the fastest-growing crimes in the United States. Complaints to the Federal Trade Commission have increased five-fold in the last three years. Consumers often become victims of without having any direct contact with the identity thieves who acquire their personal data.

By charging dinner at a restaurant, using payment cards to purchase gasoline or rent a car, or submitting personal information to employers and various levels of government, consumers may be leaving or exposing their personal data where identity thieves can access and use it without the consumers' knowledge or permission.

Reduce the chances of becoming a victim of identity theft.

- Sign all credit cards when you receive them and never lend them to anyone.
- Cancel and destroy credit cards you do not use and keep a list of the ones you use regularly.

- Carry only the identification information and credit cards that you actually need.

- Do not carry your social security card. Leave it in a secure place. This also applies to your passport unless you need it for traveling out of the country.

- Pay attention to your billing cycles and follow up with your creditors and utility companies if your bills do not arrive on time. Carefully check each of your monthly credit card statements.

- Immediately report lost or stolen credit cards or checks and any discrepancies in your monthly statements to the issuing credit card company.

- Review new checks to make sure none were stolen in transit.

- Be aware of the expiration date on your credit card. If you do not receive a reissued card before the expiration date, notify the issuing credit card company or bank.

- Shred or destroy paperwork you no longer need, such as bank machine receipts, receipts from electronic and credit card purchases, utility bills and any document that contains personal and/or financial information.

- Secure personal information in your home or office so that it is not readily accessible to others who may have access to the premises.

- Do not give out personal information over the phone, through the mail, or over the internet unless you are the one who initiated the contact and know the person or organization with whom you are dealing. Before you share such information, ensure that the organization is legitimate by checking or by calling its customer service number listed on your account statement or in the phone book.

- Protect your credit card, bank, and phone accounts, but do not keep a written record of your PIN number, social security number or computer passwords where an identity thief can easily find them. Do not carry such information in your purse or wallet.

- Order a copy of your credit report from the major credit reporting agencies at least once every year. Equifax: 800-685-1111, TransUnion: 877-322-8228, Experian: 888-397-3742.

- Make sure your credit report is accurate and includes only those activities that you have authorized. ■

Wounded Warriors dive into scuba

Story and photos
Cpl. Brandon R. Holgersen
Marine Corps Base

The Rotary Club of Jacksonville along with AA Diving here on Camp Lejeune have teamed up to help Marines in the Wounded Warrior Barracks recover by becoming scuba certified here.

John Burd, the past president of the club and a certified diver, heard about the need and presented the idea of taking on this project to the members. One week later, some members of the Jacksonville-South Rotary Club and David Peed of AA Diving were meeting with nine wounded Marines getting ready to start their class.

"It's a fun experience and a positive experience," said Lance Cpl. Chris Boreland, with the Wounded Warrior Barracks. "It's good to just get out of the barracks and do something fun."

The Rotary Club sponsored the classes with $1,500 coming from their treasury and another $1,500 being donated to them from the District Rotary Club, said John Papurca, the president elect of the club.

"The Rotary Club is always looking for good projects and this is about as worthwhile as it gets," said Papurca.

David Peed and his staff at AA Diving have had experience teaching disabled people to dive and are excited to be a part of this project. They are coordinating the entire course, which includes course materials, equipment rentals and transportation to complete the certification. AA Diving has given the Rotary Club a reduced price for the lessons and will give the Marines a discount on their personal equipment so they can continue to enjoy SCUBA diving.

The scuba training can also help the Marines with their mental health as well as their physical health by giving them a fun healthy sport to participate in.

"They are laughing and they are using a lot of fine motor skills they might not have used in awhile," said Lucia Broekhuizen, a diving instructor with AA Diving. "It's so cool to be able to help these Marines. My husband is deployed and it's good to do something."

The SCUBA training can also give them something they enjoy to replace other sporting activities they may not be able to perform because of their injuries.

At the completion of their course they will participate in an open water dive, which will make them certified to dive in any open water.

If the club receives more sponsors and funding they are planning to make this an ongoing project and expand the classes to more Wounded Warriors, said Papurca.

"I am just glad to see them doing something out of the ordinary from their day to day life," said Papurca. ■

Marines act as role players during real-world scenarios

Pfc. David Weikle

The mayor of Bedrock stands outside a dilapidated trailer eyeing the horizon and finally sees what has kept him waiting for the last few hours. He and his bodyguard have waited for a patrol of Marines. They arrive in eight up-armored Humvees, some with weapons mounted in the turret and others carrying Marines in the back, heading towards them.

The mayor grabs his rubber AK-47 and heads into the trailer, leaving behind his bodyguard. Inside, he makes sure his headgear properly covers his face, concealing his identity. Poised over a rotting couch, he starts reviewing what appears to be propaganda material written in Arabic.

Sgt. Brandon Brown, a Dallas native and section leader with Training Platoon, Company A, Anti-Terrorism Battalion, and members of his section are role-playing as Iraqis during a field exercise held Sept. 12 through 17. They played out several scenarios, giving Marines from the company the chance to react to real-world situations they may encounter in their upcoming deployment.

"We're evaluating how they act and react in certain situations," said the former sailor who joined the corps in 2003. "They're getting the chance to act exactly the same as they will when they deploy."

The vehicles stop, assuming a formation to provide security for the area. The Marines pile out of the Humvees and begin a cordon and search of the 'village' they've just entered. Some make their way toward Brown and his trailer with only his bodyguard and the flimsy walls of the building separating

MARSOC Marines judge JROTC drill, field meet

Cpl. Ken Melton
MARSOC

"Sir, good morning, sir! Cadet requests permission to use your drill field sir," a fresh-faced cadet from Myrtle Beach High School yelled.

"Permission granted cadet. Carry on," replied steely-eyed Staff Sgt. Joshua B. Whann, a staff judge advocate from Headquarters Company, U.S. Marine Corps Forces Special Operations Command (MARSOC).

Whann and other Marines from MARSOC, along with airmen, soldiers, sailors and Marines from various units spent their Saturday as judges for 6th Annual Sgt. Eugene B. Ashley High School Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps Meet in Wilmington, N.C.

The cadets were tested in several military skills including armed and unarmed drill, air rifle marksmanship, academics and physical fitness.

While the event offered few surprises to the hundreds of high schoolers in attendance, the biggest surprise was the judges who were actual active-duty service members from the surrounding area.

This was great opportunity for the school and the kids who have seen these servicemembers as active role models in their community, said Gerald D. Ward, the senior naval science instructor for Ashley High School. They also had more than 100 kids and parents volunteer their time to help the event be successful.

Cadet training: Cadets from the 6th Annual Sgt. Eugene B. Ashley High School Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps Meet in Wilmington, N.C. are graded on their close order drill. "They really get to show their school spirit in these competitions," said Gerald D. Ward, the senior naval science instructor for Ashley High School.

Ward and his cadre of volunteers, supported by the servicemembers, some from as far away as The Citadel in South Carolina, were more than ready to handle the tasks at the event.

For one judge, Pfc. William M. Broadhurst, a recent graduate of Marine Corps Recruit Depot Parris Island, S.C., the event was a trip down memory lane as he was a member of the JROTC program and 2006 graduate of AHS.

"The program made high school easier for me and helped me prepare for my military career in the Marine Corps," said the 18-year-old Broadhurst. "This opportunity was given to me when I was here and it's my chance to give something back, as well as represent my Marine Corps."

The day started with a mass formation, followed by the Pledge of Allegiance and prayer. Then the judges and the cadets, decked out in their service uniforms, positioned themselves for the morning portion of the event that would test each school's marching ability on the drill field.

"I love watching the color guard competition as much as I enjoyed participating in it when I was here," said Broadhurst. "[I enjoyed] the precision in the execution of it and the overall honor and respect that we show for the flags of our country."

The schools also tried to dazzle the judges during the armed and unarmed exhibition drill competition.

"You can tell the kids worked really hard for this event," said Whann, a 25-year-old native of Landenberg, Penn. "They all looked really good and we all had a lot of fun participating here."

During the two-hour break for lunch, the Naval JROTC cadets competed in an academic test, while the judges and the other cadets changed into their respective physical training uniforms for the afternoon team-oriented events that included relay runs, a

'Tybee Island bomb' still rests in depths of Wassaw Sound

Lance Cpl. Deanne P. Hurla
MCRD Parris Island

MCRD/ERR PARRIS ISLAND, S.C. — During the early morning hours of Feb. 5, 1958, an Air Force B-47 Stratojet bomber was soaring high above the Low country coast on a simulated combat mission, but at approximately 2 a.m., disaster struck at 36,000 ft. A group of Air Force F-86 Sabrejet fighters were in the vicinity, and without warning, one of the aircraft slammed into the bomber.

The collision destroyed the fighter, with the pilot ejecting safely, but the real concern was the weaponry aboard the crippled B-47: a hydrogen bomb.

Though the bomb utilized a removable nuclear capsule, which is required for a nuclear explosion, the weapon was not considered fully armed, but still inherently dangerous.

"The fighter was not directly involved with the B-47 simulated combat mission and did not detect the plane until it was too late to avoid a collision," said Dr. Billy Mullins, associate director of strategic security, Headquarters, United States Air Force. The F-86 crashed after the pilot successfully bailed out, and the B-47 was damaged but flyable. After three landing attempts at then Hunter Air Force Base, Ga., the 400-pound bomb was jettisoned several miles from Savannah, Ga., into the Warsaw Sound area of the Atlantic Ocean.

"The incomplete bomb was jettisoned from the damaged bomber to avoid possibility of a conventional explosion if there was a crash landing at Hunter Air Force Base, Ga.," said Mullins.

The pilots did not see an explosion upon impact and returned for a crash landing at Hunter AFB. Recovery efforts began the following morning.

"The area was intensively searched using the Air Force 270th Explosive Ordnance Disposal Squadron and approximately 100 navy personnel equipped with hand-held sonar, galvanic drag detectors and cable sweepers," Mullins said.

The search was conducted over a three square mile area where the bomb was believed to have hit the water. If the bomb did not explode on impact, based on the depth of water in the impact region, the bomb should have been buried nose-down, anywhere from 15 feet below the seabed.

"After weeks of intense searching, no evidence of the bomb, or the bomb's resting place had been found. The Air Force to freedom and the ideals represented" by the society. More than 60 Medal of Honor recipients attended the society's convention here this year. The men received their awards for extraordinary heroism on the battlefields of World War II, Korea and Vietnam. Brian Williams, the anchor and managing editor of NBC Nightly News and since for the dinner, said the men represent more than valor. They also represent sacrifice and serving a cause greater than self. This is probably the most notable gathering of men in New England since the Continental Army was formed," Williams said. Pace received the Patriot Award from Medal of Honor recipient Navy Capt. Thomas G. Kelley and from Society President Gary L. Littrell. "I want to accept this award on behalf of a very special group of Americans, and that is the families of our men and women who serve in the armed forces," Pace said. Pace gave the case for military families. "What I learned about families I learned in my own kitchen," he said. "I learned from my family, and from watching so many others, some very basic truths about the American military family."

He said that when service members deploy overseas, they know when they are in danger. Besides, they are with superbly trained and equipped units that are capable of getting them through the battle. "If you've got to be in battle, there's no place I'd rather be than in a company of Marines," Pace said.

But families don't have the luxury of knowing when their service members are in danger. "Every day that we're in combat, they think we are being shot at," Pace said. "It's an enormous strain on them."

He said that if service members are wounded in combat, the families help them recover. "And if we get awards, they stand in the background as if they had nothing to do with it," he said. "And when we get tired, they dust us off and put us back in the fight and remind us how important it is to the nation. And when we get killed, they suffer for as long as they live."

Pace said the children of military members often make the greatest sacrifices. "I had the great honor of standing next to a 12-year-old young man — David Smith," the general said. He is the son of Army Sgt. 1st Class Paul Smith, who received the Medal of Honor posthumously for his actions in the Battle for Baghdad in 2003.

"As I stood there in Washington, D.C., on the Mall paying respects to Gold Star families, and held that young man's hand in mine, I was overcome with the sacrifice that he had already made for his country," Pace said. "Our families, quite simply, serve this country as well as anyone who has ever worn the uniform."

Pace told the men and their families that the United States is at war against a relentless and cruel enemy. "Since our inception as a nation, we have had to struggle for our freedom and every challenge has been met by American men and women who have stood tall," the general said.

The 2.4 million men and women in uniform look to the past for their inspiration, Pace said. "We hope and pray in our hearts that if we are ever challenged, as you have been, that we could serve our nation just a fraction as well as you have," he said to the Medal of Honor recipients.

Pace said the United States did not ask for this war. "There are enemies out there right now who would like to take the medals off those who proudly wear them and grind them into the dirt," he said. "[There are enemies] who would like to ensure we could not gather together like this and celebrate their heroism. They want to tell us how to pray, how to dress, and they want to subjugate women."

The enemy plan is to reestablish a fundamentalist caliphate stretching from Spain to Indonesia and then take down the free world. "There are 2.4 million Americans right now, who are here to say, 'Not on our watch!'" Pace said. "And if somehow they get through that 2.4 million, there are 30 million veterans in this country they will have to deal with next and then there are at least 68 Medal of Honor recipients who will do what they did last time."

Pace told the men that he was honored to accept the award on behalf of military families. He also assured the men that the legacy "we have inherited from the heroes in this room is cherished by" the men and women in uniform today. "As surely as Americans have had heroes in the past, there are heroes serving in uniform today that will ensure our nation endures," he said.

After the dinner, Pace met with many of the Medal of Honor recipients. It also seemed that every Marine or former Marine in the Boston area attended the dinner in order to meet the heroes of the past and greet the first Marine to be appointed Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing Band from Cherry Point, N.C., performed for the event, and Irish tenor John McDermott closed the dinner with "God Bless America." The audience joined in — some with strong and true voices, others with voices lessened by age — but all standing straight and true. ■

An estimated 41.3 million people of Hispanic ethnicity live in the United States, making people of Hispanic origin the nation's largest ethnic minority. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, Hispanics constituted 14 percent of the nation's population in 2004. In addition, there are more than 1.1 million Hispanic veterans of the U.S. military, with 63,000 on active duty since 2002.

In 2002, Hispanics made up 14.5 percent of the Marine Corps' enlisted ranks and 6.4 percent of its officers. There are also more than 25 Hispanic Medal of Honor recipients, according to a Department of Defense press release.

Some organizations, such as the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute, will celebrate the month by hosting its 29th annual event in Washington, D.C., Oct. 2-4.

The CHCI event began in 1977 as a small dinner and grew over the years to become a prestigious event hosting to more than 2,000 attendees, making it one of the largest Hispanic events in the nation's capital.

"A lot of Latinos usually don't celebrate the entire month," admitted Frias, a Freeport, Texas, native. "For instance, I only celebrate the day of independence for Mexico on [Sept.] 16 by going to concerts that normally mark the holiday."

"Whether you are, Hispanic or not, this month will provide some insight for both military and non-military personnel, that we are just like everyone else," Frias said. "We all put our cammies on the same way: one leg at a time." ■ ferried some 1,200 Americans in a Beirut beach to the USS Shillie yesterday.

Gaddo said he felt immensely watching the Marines carry their mission. "They're going in to bring people out and following on what we established," he said from his Peachtree City, Ga., home. "It makes you feel pretty proud."

"We're in awe," Jordan said of Marines. "These young men and women are so professional, so well-trained and so well-equipped. Their motivation is so high."

Jordan said he's particularly proud that Marines from 1st Battalion, 8th Marine Regiment — a first and last unit he served in during a career that spanned most 30 years — are conducting a mission.

But Gaddo acknowledged that he's also concerned about the Marines' well-being. "Those of us who were there can picture exactly what the Marines are seeing," he said.

He remembers all too clearly the events of a beautiful Sunday morning 23 years ago when a terrorist bomb exploded in his barracks building.

Gaddo, 31 at the time, was a photographer with Marine Corps Air Station Beaufort, S.C., attached to the 24th MEU for the peacekeeping mission in Beirut. He had awakened early to process some film in a makeshift photo lab he'd set up on the third floor of the barracks building. After that, Gaddo had planned to join other Marines in laying plastic sheets and sandbags over a bunker to prepare it for the upcoming rainy season.

But before tackling the day's work, Gaddo headed to the command operations center in a tent about 250 yards away from the barracks to grab a quick cup of coffee. He figures it was that decision that ultimately saved his life. "Another three minutes and I would have been in the [barracks] building," he said.

From the command tent, Gaddo heard M-16 rifle fire, then a blast that threw him back 6 feet from where he was standing. "It was an amazing concussion," he said. "It was like somebody hit me with a two-by-four. I could feel my face being pushed back as the shock wave approached."

Dazed, Gaddo looked over the two- or three-story building that stood between him and the barracks building and saw a big mushroom cloud rising from the area. The leaves had been blown off all the trees. Gaddo realized that he could see the air traffic control tower of Beirut International Airport — a landmark the barracks building should have blocked from his vantage point.

Suddenly the realization sunk in: the barracks had been hit. "What had normally been a four-story building was down to a story and a half of rubble," he recalled. "The dust was all still rising and it started to all become clear."

Gaddo and his fellow Marines sprung into action, grabbing cots and litters and running toward the building to search for survivors. They dodged incoming sniper fire and worked amid the fires throughout the area, some sparked by exploding ammunition that had been in the barracks building.

"There was a lot of chaos. We were all in shock," he said.

The rescuers struggled to get a grip on their emotions: anger at their attackers, sadness for those lost, and for some, guilt that their lives had been spared when others' had not.

"You go through a whole range of emotions," Gaddo said. "We lost a lot of Marines that day."

Gaddo, Jordan and fellow veterans continue to remember those Marines through the Beirut Veterans of America, a group dedicated to ensuring that service members killed in Beirut aren't forgotten.

As founding vice president of the group, Gaddo is busy planning the "23rd Remembrance" event Oct. 21 to 23 in Jacksonville, N.C., home of the Beirut Memorial. The memorial includes a wall with the names of all those killed during the peacekeeping mission in Lebanon from 1982 to 1984.

The event will include a candlelight vigil at 6 a.m. on Oct. 23, when all the names on the wall will be read aloud. "Reading their names aloud ensures that these men are remembered for their courage and their sacrifice," said Jordan, the group's founding president.

Jordan expressed hope that Americans will remember not just those lost, but also the lessons of Oct. 23, 1983. "We were being tested, and we failed the test," he said of the U.S. response to the attack.

Jordan calls the attack on the Marine barracks "the first skirmish in ... the battle against terror" and said it's critical that the United States not falter in its war on terror.

The United States must work with Muslims to counter the threat Islamic extremists present, he said. "We need to understand that these people believe in what they are doing" and won't stop until they re-establish an extremist state under a supreme Islamic ruler, he said of the terrorists.

"We need to understand that they are willing to die for it and willing to kill us to achieve it," he said. ■

Friends, families celebrate homecoming

2nd ANGLICO Marines, sailors return from seven-month deployment

Pfc. Christopher D. Lyttle
II Marine Expeditionary Force

Families and friends of 2nd Air Naval Gunfire Liaison Company, II Marine Expeditionary Force, celebrated the Sept. 18 homecoming of approximately 150 Marines and sailors returning from a seven-month deployment in Iraq.

For many of the Marines, this was the second or third time they returned safely to their loved ones. Food, tents, lighting and bagpipe music were all prepared to set the evening scene for the returnees of 2nd ANGLICO. People gathered on the sidewalk with balloons and posters, eager to reunite with their Marines and sailors when they stepped off the buses.

"I've never seen such an impressive homecoming. Everyone did a top-notch job in giving the Marines a warm welcome," said Capt. Michael G. Bradford, firepower control team leader, 2nd ANGLICO. With the exception of Capt. Christopher T. Pate who was killed in action July 21, all the Marines made it home safe to their families, and some greeted their newborns for the very first time, he said.

Bradford mentioned that much of 2nd ANGLICO had previous deployment experience, which eased the minds of worried families while waiting for their Marines' safe return.

Among the families in the crowd were Robert and Leslie, parents of a forward observer for 2nd ANGLICO. Leslie said this was her son's second deployment. She noted that it's easier to handle emotionally when understanding the duty he serves for the country and how he was well prepared for this past expedition.

Unit leaders proudly gave kudos for unit missions carried out in areas such as Al Asad, Ramadi and Fallujah.

"During our deployment, we were spread out all across the II MEF battle space," said Capt. David P. Snipes, a fire-power control team leader for 2nd ANGLICO. "Our basic mission was to provide fire support on any level while maintaining a bird's eye view of everything."

Bradford expressed his content with the way unit tasks were carried out during their deployment, even when working with other services.

"As an infantry team leader, I think we did a phenomenal job with providing support for the Army as well. The way the war is working now strongly involves air intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance missions," said Bradford.

The mission of 2nd

Homecoming: Maj. Kipp Wahlgren, operations officer for 2nd Air Naval Gunfire Liaison Company, Marine Expeditionary Force, holds his 6-month-old son for the first time with his family. Wahlgren is one of approximately 150 Marines and sailors returning from a seven-month deployment in Iraq.

ANGLICO requires them to be constantly ready to deploy. While stateside, they will continue training to be readily available to support troops currently serving in Iraq. For now, families can celbrate this time with their Marines in safety and comfort at home. ■ runs, a Marine Corps pull-up and flexed arm hang competition and more. There was also a tug-of-war competition. The winner's of that event got a chance to test their strength against the Marine judges.

"They really get to show their school spirit in these competitions," said Ward, a 59-year-old retired Navy Lieutenant. "It also boosts their self-esteem when they accomplish things they thought they could not previously do."

The panel of judges kept the motivation going during the muggy day through the final event, an individual armed and unarmed knockout drill.

"Their motivation was motivating us. They respected us and we wanted all of them to do well," said Cpl. Ivan O. Galvan, an administrative clerk from Logistics Company, MARSOC. "We could see their confidence, bearing and discipline. These ROTC programs are really helping bring them to the best of their potential."

A round of 'ooh-rahs' and thunderous applause rewarded the judges' hard work before the awards and the announcement of the overall winner, Cape Fear High School.

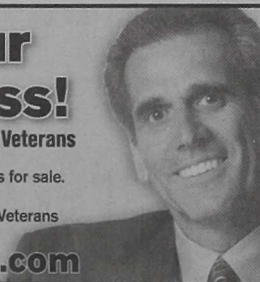

"It was great and everyone will (gain) more experience from it. We will use this experience to prepare for any future competitions and I would volunteer in a heartbeat," said Galvan, a 21-year-old native of Brownsville, Texas. "This is something that not only servicemembers, but everyone should be involved in. Not just for themselves, but for the kids who are this country's future." ■

The bodyguard to the Marines and a greeting. "What do you want?" the guard asks them as they approach. "Let me see your leader," the Marines act as if they are trained and continue to advance, asking him to put down his gun. They aren't sure if he is what he claims to be and need to ensure he is armed.

We didn't tell them he was good and who he was, but we wanted it to be realistic as possible," Brown, a 1994 Belton High School graduate, is aren't always going to have all the answers to questions like, "Is this an urgent?"

Following the man's sure to cooperate, the Marines move into action, arming him and breaking his arm in the process. They call for a paramedic to look after him and then proceed to reach the mayor's trail. Inside they find the propaganda material he had been looking over and confiscate it.

After the Marines finish searching the area, the mayor speaks with the Marine in charge about the damages to his home. The patrol leader gives him a form he can fill out and tells him where to take it, assuring him he will be reimbursed for any damage during the search. The Marines load up into their vehicles and continue the patrol.

Once the Marines have left and the exercise is over, Brown and his comrades discussed how the scenario played out and returned to the rest of Training Platoon. The platoon, made up of Marines preparing to leave the company, has the job of preparing Marines for deployment.

"Just because we're getting ready to leave the company doesn't mean we're through," Brown explained. "It's a way of saying, 'your Corps still needs you.' These Marines were enthusiastic to get the chance to serve the company one last time."

declared the bomb irretrievably lost on April 16, 1968," said Mullins.

In August 2000, Congressman Jack Kingston requested the Air Force reinvestigate the accident following inquiries from media and local civilians.

After the search, the Air Force published its findings in an April 2001 report.

The Air Force received assistance from the Navy, the Department of Energy, the Savannah District Army Corps of Engineers and the Skidaway Oceanographic Institute in looking for the bomb. They wanted to investigate the details surrounding the incident, the most likely current condition of the bomb, associated hazards and to determine whether search and subsequent recovery operations should be attempted.

Based on the available data, the suspected orientation of the bomb, the search methods and available equipment, the Navy Supervisor of Salvage estimates there is a very low possibility of successfully locating the bomb.

If the bomb was found and the decision made to recover it, there could have been a substantial economic impact to the region if an accidental detonation occurred during search or recovery operations.

The Air Force decided to leave the bomb status as irretrievably lost for the following reasons. If the bomb remains in its resting place, there is no possibility of a nuclear explosion, no risk to the public and it avoids the potential of environmental impact to the environment.

Again in 2004, an investigation was opened. The Air Force requested a team of experts to conduct a radiological survey of an area in Warsaw Sound alleged to have elevated levels of radiation. The survey revealed only naturally occurring radioactive sources.

No new information was uncovered to lead the Air Force to modify its 2001 conclusions.

"The Air Force concurs with expert conclusions that it is in the best interest of the public, and the environment, to leave the bomb in its resting place and that it remain categorized as irretrievably lost," concluded Mullins.

CLR-2 TIES DPC

Story and photos by
Cpl. Brandon R. Holgerson
Marine Corps Base

The Deployment Processing Command soccer team tied with Combat Logistics Regiment-2 by the score of 1-1 in an intramural match held Sept. 28 between two teams in the Gold Division.

Deployment Processing Command (1-1-3) scored the first goal in the beginning of the game and CLR-2 (3-2-0) returned the favor before the end of the first half. During the second half of the game it remained a stalemate due to some great defensive plays on both sides.

"I feel we should have won the game," said Carlos Betancourt, the CLR-2 coach. "We had more opportunities, we just didn't capitalize. We are going to work on marking players because that is how we got scored on and playing more as a team."

The coach from the DPC had a much different view from the CLR-2 coach after the game.

"I think we did pretty good," said Rik Rodriquez, the DPC coach. "They are a good team so I think we did well that we tied."

Before the end of the game there was an injury, which stopped the game action for several minutes. Shelby Ochs with DPC hurt his knee after a collision with a CLR-2 player. ■

2006 Marine Corps Half-Marathon draws crowd

Matt Vaughan
Staff reporter

Clear skies on a beautiful 76-degree fall day helped make the 2006 Marine Corps Half Marathon an enjoyable experience for the 152 runners that competed.

Friends and family of the marathon men and women lined the front lawn of Russell Elementary as they waited for everyone to finish. Their was a huge stage set up with music blaring through speakers and a tent that covered tables filled with bagels, bananas and other goodies.

Camp Lejeune's Semper Fit Division played host to the half marathon that covered 13.1 miles of the base's scenic landscape. The Marine Corps Half Marathon is considered one of the fastest and most well-designed courses in the southeast. The race is designed to challenge each individual's endurance, stamina and overall fitness.

The day kicked off at 8 a.m. and ran until Elmer Smith, the final contestant, crossed the finish line three hours and thirty seven minutes later.

Out of the total number of entrants there were 46 women to go along with 106 men.

Each participant in the race was awarded with a medal upon completion, but the top three in each age category were celebrated along with the top three overall.

The first person to cross the finish line Saturday was David Kaggwa of Camp Lejeune with a time of 1:20:56. Following him in second and third place respectively were Adrian Rojas (1:21:45) and Phil Rigaut (1:22:14).

The top female contestant and 14th overall was Karen Oudekerk of Havelock with a time of 1:33:14.

To find out all the times of runners who competed, visit www.active.com. ■

Crossing the finish line: Two runners finish the 13.1-mile half-marathon in under two hours on Sept. 30. The day's great weather was also enjoyed by friends and family.

Strange lack of Sox in '06 playoffs

Digested Sports Thoughts

with Matt
Vaughan

After another grueling season of 162 games the playoffs are finally here. But there is something extremely odd about this seasons playoffs.

There are absolutely no Sox to be seen. No Manny Ramirez and David Ortiz in the red or Jim Thome and Paul Konerko in the white.

The World Series Champions of 2004 and 2005 not only went home for the fall, but packed up and moved out without a peep. There was no charge at the end of the season or even any meaningful games in the last two weeks in Boston or Chicago.

The Yankees wrapped everything up in July as the Red Sox went into their swoon and the defending champs just simply couldn't keep up in a division that featured the Tigers and Twins.

This will mark the first year without a Sox representative since 2002. The craziest thing about it all is that each team not only didn't make the playoffs, but finished third in their respective divisions. We're talking about the teams with the number two (red) and number four (white) payrolls in all of baseball.

Now that we know we're not going to get any Sox therapy in this year's playoffs, is there any reason to watch?

I'm an American League guy and proud to say it. So let us forget about the National League all together (they're just playing for second place anyways) and focus on reasons why we should follow each one of these AL teams.

The New York Yankees -- Besides picking the team that has a $213 million dollar payroll and a lineup that is considered as the modern day Murderer's Row, they actually have a few likeable guys in their lineup in Melky Cabrera and Johnny Damon. Not to mention they have two admitted steroid users (Jason Giambi and Gary Sheffield) which is always fun. They have the ugliest pitcher in the history of baseball (Randy Johnson) to begin a game that the greatest closer of all time can finish (Mariano Rivera). Unless the Yanks face Johan Santana twice in an ALCS match up you can start engraving their rings.

The Minnesota Twins -- The only team with any chance of beating the Yankees features the best pitcher in baseball (Johan Santana). They also have a batting champion (Joe Mauer) who platoons as a brilliant catcher when he isn't hitting .347. Throw in a guy who might win the MVP (Justin Morneau) and the most electrifying centerfielder around (Torii Hunter) and you've got a solid team. The only problem is they need a guy named Boof (Bonser) to come up huge to win it all. Not good.

The Oakland Athletics -- The best pitching staff in the playoffs (Barry Zito, Dan Haren, Rich Harden) to go along with the worst lineup (Jason Kendall, Jay Payton, Mark Ellis). I really like the A's based on winning a short series alone, but I can't see them getting past the Twins. They also have the man who should win the 2006 MVP and Comeback Player of the Year Award in Frank Thomas. Without the Big Hurt this team would've scored nine runs all season.

The Detroit Tigers -- Lots to like with these guys. A great young pitching staff, (Justin Verlander, Jeremy Bonderman) some exciting young stars (Carlos Guillen, Craig Monroe) on a team that lost over 100 games just two years ago and a Jim Leyland. They were in first the entire year until the last weekend of the season when they were swept by the Royals to fall into the Wild Card. Their gift? The New York Yankees. Try not to get swept boys.

So now you know that even though I'm a die hard Sox (red) fan I'm picking the Yankees to pound an overmatched NL team in the World Series.

Wrong.

I'm going with Red Sox West (the Los Angeles Dodgers) in six over the Bombers. All Hail Grady Little.

Matt Vaughan is a staff reporter at THE GLOBE and a fan of the Sox. The red ones in particular. ■

Tiger pushes PGA streak to six with another victory

Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

CHANDLERS CROSS, England — A streak that began 10 weeks ago on the sun-baked links of Hoylake reached six straight PGA Tour victories on the rain-drenched fairways north of London on Sunday when Woods went wire-to-wire in the American Express Championship. He became the first player in tour history to win at least eight times in three seasons.

Threatened only by the weather that twice delayed the inevitable, Woods closed with a 4-under 67 for an eight-shot victory over Adam Scott and Ian Poulter.

"He's dominating the game," Scott said. "It's not the first time he's done it, either."

The trophy in hand, Woods had one foot in a courtesy car that was ready to take him away when he took a few questions from the BBC. After playing seven times in the last nine weeks, he was eager to get home to Florida.

"I'm getting away for a little bit," Woods said. "As far as golf, I've had enough of it for a while."

This might have been his most dominating performance since the streak began at the British Open in July and not just because the eight-shot victory was his largest margin since winning by 11 at the 2003 Bay Hill Invitational.

Woods had such control over his game that he was third in driving distance and fifth in driving accuracy, missing only 12 fairways all week. And, during one stretch, he hit 36 consecutive greens in regulation, a streak that ended when his approach on the 12th hole drifted left and into a bunker for his only bogey of the final round.

One other streak ended on the last hole of the tournament — it was the first time all week he failed to make eagle on 18. ■

NBA Basketball
OKLAHOMA CITY — The New Orleans Hornets said Sunday they have signed second round pick Marcus Vinicius.

Vinicius, a 6-8 forward from Brazil, was selected 43rd overall in the 2006 draft. Before entering the draft, Vinicius played four years internationally, most recently with Objetivo Sao Carlos in the Brazilian Paulista League, the third highest division in Brazil.

He averaged 19.5 points, 5.4 rebounds, 4.0 assists and 2.4 steals in 34.7 minutes of play last season. The 22-year old appeared on the Hornets summer league roster at the Toshiba Vegas Summer League, but did not play due to a broken finger in his shooting hand suffered during draft workouts.

"Marcus had a great pre-draft workout for us and we had him rated very high during the draft," Hornets General Manager Jeff Bower said. "We felt he was a great pick for us in the second round and we look forward to seeing him in action during training camp and the preseason."

NFL Football

TAMPA, Fla. — Tampa Bay quarterback Chris Simms was released from St. Joseph's Hospital over the weekend, less than a week after undergoing surgery to remove a ruptured spleen.

The fourth-year pro was injured during a loss to Carolina on Sept. 24. He took several hard hits during the game and the Buccaneers originally thought he had bruised ribs and was battling dehydration when he was taken to the hospital.

It's uncertain which play Simms was hurt on, but Panthers defensive end Al Wallace was fined $7,500 for a fourth-quarter hit that Bucs coach Jon Gruden thought might have been most damaging.

Doctors expect the 26-year-old son of Super Bowl-winning quarterback Phil Simms to make a full recovery. It normally takes about six weeks to heal and the Bucs have not ruled out the possibility of his playing again this season.

— Associated Press

NASHVILLE, TENN. — Tennessee defensive tackle Albert Haynesworth was ejected early in the third quarter Sunday after he kicked Dallas center Andre Gurode in the face. Now the tackle expects to be punished and knows he deserves it.

"What I did out there was disgusting," Haynesworth said. "It doesn't matter what the league does to me. The way I feel right now, you just can't describe it."

Julius Jones had just scored on a 5-yard run, putting Dallas up 20-6 in what wound up as a 45-14 victory. Gurode's helmet came off, and Haynesworth, standing over him, used his right foot to kick Gurode on the top of his head.

Gurode said they hadn't been talking or having any exchanges that led to Haynesworth kicking him twice. He received stitches above his forehead and beneath his eye.

Referee Jerome Boger disqualified Haynesworth and the player walked off the field after talking briefly with Titans coach Jeff Fisher.

The coach called Haynesworth's actions unacceptable and promised he would be punished by the Titans even if the NFL disciplines him.

NCAA Football

WINSTON SALEM, N.C. — The Demon Deacons (5-0, 1-0) — the only Atlantic Coast Conference team with an unbeaten overall record — can finally focus on their toughest opponent yet.

"Now that next week has come around, we're going to hit the film room hard, give a lot of effort in practice and focus a lot on Clemson and what they do," Skinner said.

The Tigers (4-1, 2-1) — the ACC's highest-ranked team — have won three straight since a double-overtime loss at Boston College.

But they haven't had much recent success against Wake Forest.

The Demon Deacons won two of the past three meetings, including a 31-27 victory last year in Winston-Salem in which Wake Forest scored the game-winning 33 seconds to play, then stopped Clemson at the 3-yard line as time expired.

The Demon Deacons' critics have said their hot start is a product of an easy early-season schedule, which included wins against some of the worst teams in the Big East (Syracuse, Connecticut), ACC (Duke) and Southeastern Conference (Mississippi), plus the I-AA Flames.

Wake Forest has lost seven straight games against teams ranked in the AP Top 25 and hasn't beaten a ranked team since a 38-24 win over No. 14 North Carolina State on Sept. 6, 2003.

— Associated Press

EPL Soccer

LONDON — Manchester United moved back into first place in the English Premier League, beating Newcastle 2-0 Sunday with both goals coming from Ole Gunnar Solskjaer.

Man United and Chelsea have 16 points, but United leads on goal difference. The victory stopped Manchester United's slight skid in the Premier League, where it was winless in its previous two games — a loss to Arsenal and a tie with Reading.

Blackburn also won, but it may have lost former U.S. goalkeeper Brad Friedel to a groin injury.

owners. Unless you are playing in some alternate universe, someone in your league is 0-4. This means people are looking to trade. As you are offered trades, don't buy into the hype that is surrounding guys like Frank Gore, TJ Houshmandzadeh and others who have had a couple of outstanding games. None of those players will maintain their numbers throughout the season.

Quick hits:

1) Newcastle lost to the Yankees of the Premiership, Manchester United, 2-0 last weekend. I think I am rooting for the Mariners of English soccer.

2) Speaking of the Yankees, I don't want to pick them to win the World Series. But if you had to put money on the winner, don't you have to go with the Bombers? The pitching is above average, and that line up... it's like making a fake team on MVP Baseball '06.

3) Frank Thomas' resurgence is remarkable. Of course, so are his statistics. Despite being the most feared hitter of the early 1990s, Thomas is often overlooked when compared to his peers. Including his injury-riddled seasons since 2001, Thomas is a lifetime .305 hitter who has hit 39 homeruns and batted in 122 runs a year. That's on par with Ken Griffey, Jr. (.291, 41 and 117), Jeff Bagwell (.297, 34 and 115) and Gary Sheffield (.297, 33 and 109). Hopefully this season with the A's will bring him the credit he deserves.

4) I'm sorry, I just don't care about NASCAR. Especially when guys are winning races by coasting after running out of gas. Actually, I'm not sorry. Driving around in circles for four hours at 180 miles per hour is a remarkable skill, but watching an event hoping people crash just doesn't appeal to me.

5) The NBA is almost here... That's Fantastic!

6) Comments? Concerns? Think I'm an insane, somewhat deranged moron? E-mail me at shane.suzuki@usmc.mil. ■

NEW YORK — Joe Mauer became the first catcher to win the American League batting title, going 2-for-4 for the Minnesota Twins on the final day of the regular season to hold off the New York Yankees' Derek Jeter.

Mauer doubled and singled against the Chicago White Sox, leaving his average at .347 — down from a high of .392 on July 1 but good enough to best Jeter, who went 1-for-5 against Toronto and finished at .343.

"You couldn't really not think about it," Mauer said. "There were so many questions. Scores on the board, people saying you need to do this, do that. I've never been so nervous in my life. I'm just happy it's all over with and we're here celebrating."

Mauer became the first catcher to win a batting title in either league since Ernie Lombardi hit .330 for the 1942 Boston Braves.

"That's something you can never take away when you're the first. It's unbelievable, the things that happened today," Mauer said.

Jeter, who has never won a batting title, finished second to Boston's Nomar Garciaparra in 1999 and four years later went 0-for-3 on the final day, finishing two points behind Boston's Bill Mueller and one back of Manny Ramirez.

"Everyone would love to win a batting title," Jeter said. "We got bigger and better things starting on Tuesday so that's our main focus."

The Yankees and Twins both finished as American League division champions. New York faces Detroit in the first round and Minnesota plays Oakland.

Pittsburgh's Freddy Sanchez won the National League batting title for the first time, going 2-for-4 against Cincinnati to wind up at .344, five points ahead of Florida's Miguel Cabrera. It was the NL-high 25th batting championship for the Pirates, the first since Bill Madlock's in 1983.

"It hasn't sunk in yet, but it's something special," Sanchez said.

Philadelphia's Ryan Howard led the major leagues with 58 homers — the highest total since Barry Bonds' record 73 in 2001, and 149 RBIs.

Boston's David Ortiz led the AL in home runs (54) and RBIs (137).

Seattle's Ichiro Suzuki led the majors with 224 hits. With seven straight 200-hit seasons, Suzuki matched Wade Boggs for the second-longest streak behind Willie Keeler's eight in a row from 1894-1901.

Chicago's Juan Pierre led the NL with 204 hits, one more than Philadelphia's Chase Utley.

The New York Mets' Jose Reyes topped the majors with 64 stolen bases, leading the NL for the second straight year. Tampa Bay's Carl Crawford stole 58 bases, winning his third AL steals title.

Florida's Hanley Ramirez scored 119 runs and stole 51 bases, becoming the first NL rookie with 110 runs and 50 swipes.

For the first time in modern major league history, there were no 20-game winners in a non-shortened season.

Minnesota's Johan Santana and the New York Yankees' Chien-Ming Wang topped the AL at 19-6. In the NL, six pitchers tied with 16 wins: Arizona's Brandon Webb, Los Angeles teammates Derek Lowe and Brad Penny, Chicago's Carlos Zambrano and Cincinnati's Aaron Harang.

Santana won his second AL ERA title at 2.77, and Houston's Roy Oswalt led the NL at 2.98.

Webb began the day with a chance to lead the NL in wins and ERA, but had his shortest outing of the season, lasting only four innings and giving up seven runs to San Diego.

Santana struck out 245 to lead the majors and win his third straight AL title. Harang struck out 216, one more than San Diego's Jake Peavy for the NL lead.

Francisco Rodriguez led the majors with 47 saves after tying for the AL lead last year, and San Diego's Trevor Hoffman topped the NL with 46, raising his career total to a record 482.

Kansas City (62-100) became just the 11th team in major league history to lose 100 games in three straight seasons, the first since the Toronto Blue Jays from 1977-79, their first three seasons.

Pittsburgh (67-95) had its 14th straight losing season, two shy of the record set by the Philadelphia Phillies from 1933-48, but Detroit (95-67) stopped its streak of sub-.500 years at 12. ■

Vaughan and Cameron's Week 5 picks show they have a little something special

Matt Vaughan
Staff reporter

As we head into Week 5 of the NFL season I feel my pockets beginning to grow ever so slightly with each passing week. After my Week 3 debacle I've been able to rebound, going 9-3 the last few weeks. I'm feeling pretty comfortable about this week too — as long as T.O. hands the Eagles a little slice of revenge.

Sure Thing:

Buffalo at Chicago — The Bills have been playing relatively well all season and beat what some say (I disagree) is a good Vikings team last week. What hurts them is the arm of J.P. Losman and the fact that they play in an extremely weak AFC East. The Bears, on the other hand, have the best defense in football and have been by far the best team in the NFL through Week 4. Rex Grossman is coming alive under center and I look for Chicago to man-handle the Bills in a game that is decided by half-time.

Head Scratcher:

Oakland at San Francisco — Don't worry, I can feel the excitement building inside you as you prepare for this epic battle. Breaking down these teams is about as easy as it gets. The Raiders are bad. Really bad. They have no quarterback, an offensive line in shambles and a defense that is headlined by 77-year-old Warren Sapp. The 49ers have a decent young offense led by former number one pick Alex Smith and newcomer Frank Gore. We won't even mention their defense. They couldn't stop Donovan McNabb's mother from making Campbell's Soup. I think a close and extremely ugly game will come down to which team makes fewer mistakes. Take San Fran. But never, I repeat never, take them again.

Ninja Special:

Dallas at Philadelphia — Terrell Owens back to Philadelphia. That is the only headline or top story media outlets will be churning out until next Sunday. It won't even be about the game and that makes me sick. T.O. only played in Philly for a season and a half. I mean, come on. When it comes to the game on the field though I have a feeling Dallas comes away victorious. I really like Owens and Glenn against the Eagles secondary even though Drew Bledsoe is their quarterback. It will be close, but Dallas sneaks it out.

Random Picks:

Tampa Bay goes to work for the first time without Chris Simms at quarterback. I think they'll struggle mightily against a surprisingly solid Saints team. Look for Reggie Bush to get his first touchdown of the season en-route to a big day. The hapless Lions travel to Minnesota for a matchup of a team not as bad as its record and one much worse than its record. Look for the Lions to get their first win in a tight game. In Atlantic Coast Conference action I like the Seminoles to head into Raleigh and put a beat down on N.C. State. Wolfpack quarterback Marcus Stone will have at least 3 interceptions.

Last Week: 4-2 Season Record: 12-9 ■

Jamie Cameron
Assistant managing editor

After four weeks reporting knee jerk reactions on the NFL's "teams of destiny" and "seasons of lost hope," things look like they are settling down into some semblance of normalcy. Rumors of the New England Patriots' imminent demise (including my own bit-part in that scuttlebutt) were grossly exaggerated. After waiting for a month to make the call, it's finally official — the Miami Dolphins are horrible. The Chicago Bears, with their swarming defense and free-wheeling young quarterback are staring an 8-0 record right in the eye. Check out their upcoming schedule: home vs. Buffalo, away vs. Arizona, bye, home vs. San Francisco, home vs. Miami. Ohhhh, I'm starting to have flashbacks to 1985.

On a Limb:

Washington at New York Giants — The Redskins are coming off a must-win victory over Jacksonville that raised their record to 2-2. The home-standing Giants are coming off a bye-week that gave them a chance to lick their wounds after getting throttled by Seattle in Week 3. In spite of the fact that I think the Giants are a better football team than their last outing would suggest, I saw something in the 'Skins' win last Sunday. Clinton Portis has shaken his early-season shoulder injury and Santana Moss of 2005 looks like he's ready to join the party in 2006. Washington in a close one.

Comfort Zone:

Cleveland at Carolina — Boy, that Charlie Frye sure can make things happen, can't he? Yes. Kellen Winslow really was worth all the hype, isn't he? That remains to be seen. Reuben Droughns doesn't even need an offensive line to find room to run, does he? Everyone needs an O-line, everyone. Do you think the Browns can go into Charlotte and get on a roll? No, not a chance. It appears that the Panthers are starting to get it going. They are a far cry from the Super Bowl champions that some were predicting, but they are a heck of a lot closer to a trip to Miami than the Browns. Look for big games from all of the Panthers' weapons: Steve Smith, Keyshawn Johnson, DeShaun Foster and even Jake Delhomme.

JamCam Special:

Pittsburgh at San Diego — The reigning Super Bowl champs are 1-2 and appear to be suffering from the post-championship hangover that's supposed to be reserved for the runners-up. The Chargers lost last week, but they are still a force to be reckoned with in the AFC, especially as quarterback Philip Rivers continues to make himself at home in the pocket. It seems like these Steelers keep tripping over themselves in the tunnel. There will be no repeat.

Random Picks:

Just to show you that I'm not afraid to pick the tough games that might hurt my bottom line, take Baltimore over the Denver Broncos on Monday night. St. Louis at Green Bay promises to be a high-scoring affair. As one of Brett Favre's (this Brett Favre, the one that should have retired three seasons ago) biggest detractors, I'm going with the Rams. On Saturday, I take heart in the continuing collapse of the Sunshine State's pigskin dominance and choose ninth-ranked LSU over the No. 5 University of Florida Gators.

Hook Line & SINKER

Drum fishing "off the hook"

Hook Line & Sinker
with

Jamie
Cameron

One fish, two fish, redfish, redfish!

Red drum fishing in the New River has reached epic proportions, according to T.J. "Jigger" DeFelice. Now, Jigger is a bass angler, but when the redfish really turn on in the lower river, even he can't help but fall under their spell. Topwater lures, live shrimp and shrimp under popping corks will catch the fish, counsels Eric Powell of New River Marina. Powell, by the way, agrees with DeFelice that the drum fishing — it's fantastic just about anywhere you can throw a bait to.

Powell also reports that the speckled trout fishing in the lower river is starting to hit its stride with the cooler air and water temperatures. Spot angling continues to be good in the waterways. Big Spanish mackerel are running along the Topsail Island beachfront and a little further out, the king mackerel fishing is good.

To the east, Richard Ehrenkauser, a.k.a. Dr. Bogus, says the fishing is getting better all the time as autumn takes hold.

Along the beach, big keeper flounder are taking artificial lures, mullet minnows and cut bait. Bogus is having good luck with Mirrolures, soft plastics on jigs and even Kastmaster spoons bounced along the bottom.

Surf fishing in this manner for flounder will often result in a mixed bag that includes speckled trout and, of course, red drum. Fishermen using cut bait and sand fleas are also catching nice pompano and sea mullet.

Unfortunately, spot fishing along the Carteret County coast is lagging behind Onslow County, but the next cold front could change things and get them feeding again.

Pier fishing along Bogue Banks has been tough recently, with a few spots, pompano, spadefish, bluefish and Spanish coming over the railings. The flounder bite has remained steady, with many keepers on Bogue Inlet Pier in Emerald Isle and mostly undersized fish landed further up the beach on Sportsman's Pier.

Nearshore boat anglers looking for bottomfish should concentrate their efforts around the artificial reefs and natural rocks like the Dead Tree Hole, ARs 315 and 342 and Bear Inlet Rocks. There are sea mullet, sea bass, flounder, gray trout to be had when the weather allows boaters to pass through the inlets.

Back to the bass scene: DeFelice reports an on-and-off bite on the Neuse and New rivers, as well as the Maysville rock quarry lakes. The river large-mouths are schooling around shrimp, mullet and menhaden, while the lake fish are moving into the shallows.

Many lake bass are fat with shad now and this is the time of year to catch a real hog. It will take time and patience, but it can happen to you.

Cool weather, blue skies and plenty of fish to catch — it just doesn't get much better than this, you just have to get out and go fishing.

Cameron is an enthusiastic, if not very successful fisherman. ■

Checking the line: Participants in the North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher's surf fishing workshop bait their hooks before casting their lines into the ocean.

Fort Fisher offers fall fishing course

Press Release
North Carolina Aquarium

KURE BEACH, N.C. – Surf fishing enthusiasts know that autumn brings the best fishing of the year. Fishermen flock to the region to hook the migratory fish, including speckled sea trout and striped bass, that appear in massive numbers close to the shore.

"Fall is my favorite season for surf fishing," said Fort Fisher surf fishing instructor Rick Wilkinson. "The fish are almost sure to be biting, and the weather is usually great."

Wilkinson and Ryan "Simba" Glass offer classes for surf fishing beginners and experienced pros to fish with the aquarium's experts. After receiving instruction at the aquarium, participants will practice their new skills on the four miles of undeveloped beaches at the Fort Fisher State Recreation Area, one of the best fishing spots in the state.

The workshops will run Saturdays through the end of November, with the exceptions of Oct. 14 and Nov. 18. After November, the workshops will not be offered again until next April when the fish return.

The workshop lasts from 9 a.m. to noon. Each session begins with a classroom discussion, then moves to the nearby beach for two fun-filled hours of surf fishing.

All fishing equipment and bait are provided by the aquarium.

"It's a catch-and-release program," said Wilkinson, "so don't bring your coolers."

The workshops are for ages 10 and up and advance registration is required.

The aquarium is located 15 miles south of Wilmington on US 421, just beyond the town of Kure Beach and less than a mile north of the Southport-Fort Fisher ferry terminal.

Now celebrating their 30th year in operation, the state's three public aquariums are located at Fort Fisher, at Pine Knoll Shores and on Roanoke Island. The Division of Aquariums is administered by the North Carolina Department of Environment and Natural Resources. The aquariums work together to inspire appreciation and conservation of North Carolina's aquatic environments.

For general information on the Aquariums and the fishing course, visit the North Carolina Aquariums Web site at www.ncaquariums.com.

MCCS offers chance to attend Super Bowl XLI

Staff reports
Marine Corps Community Services

This fall, MCCS clubs and restaurants across the Corps will be sponsoring the MCCS Football Bash in an effort to get Marines into MCCS facilities for a little fun, camaraderie and football.

From Oct. 13 to Dec. 7, any time you patronize an MCCS club or restaurant, you will be eligible to enter into a raffle for a chance to win the Grand Prize — a five-day/four-night, all-expense paid trip for two to Miami, FL, to attend Super Bowl XLI, valued at over $7,000.

The Grand Prize winner will also receive $500 spending money. The second place prize will be $1,000 and merchandise and the third place prize will be $500 and merchandise.

Each installation will consolidate entries and hold a drawing for installation first, second, and third place winners on Dec. 8. These winners will receive MCCS gift certificates and merchandise. The installation first place winners will be entered in the drawing for the top three prizes including the Grand Prize trip to Super Bowl XLI. The Grand Prize Drawing will be held on Dec. 15 at HQMC, Personal and Family Readiness Division, aboard MCRD Quantico, VA.

Authorized patrons can obtain entry forms at Officers', Staff NCO, Enlisted, or Consolidated Clubs, and MCCS operated base restaurants. Bases that do not have an enlisted club, entry tickets will be available at the recreational center where enlisted personnel gather. It is the responsibility of the patron to complete and return entry tickets in time for the drawing. Illegible or incomplete entries and those submitted by unauthorized patrons are null and void. No purchase is necessary to enter in the contest and prizes are not redeemable for cash.

Official event sponsors include AT&T, Coca-Cola, Coors Brewing Company, Tyson Foods, and Weber. If you have questions, contact the MCCS club or restaurant manager in your local area. ■

On the job with female combat instructors

Cpl. Brandon R.
Holgersen
Marine Corps Base

Marines are made at recruit training, but at Marine Combat Training Battalion, combat instructors mold them into riflemen. This job could not be done without the female combat instructors at MCT, School of Infantry (East), who help shape both female and male Marines as they attend training.

The female combat instructors have the same roles and responsibilities as their male counterparts and have the same prerequisites to get the special duty assignment, said Sgt. Maj. George J. Weis, sergeant major for MCT.

"I need some hard-charging female instructors for female students to look up to," said Weis.

Female instructors make up 25 percent of the instructors at SOI, but that leaves them spread very thinly over the different training companies, said Weis. Ideally, if female instructors made up 40 percent of the instructors it would better serve the Marines training at MCT.

'Dude, where's my car?' Towing POVs a common occurrence on base

Lance Cpl. Patrick M. Fleischman
Marine Corps Base

A foreboding notice covered in brilliant orange publicizes "Warning this vehicle will be impounded if it is not removed within 72 hours." This is not a polite suggestion, it's a reality.

The towing of privately owned vehicles is a daily occurrence aboard Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune due to illegal parking, abandonment, inoperable vehicles and lack of proper vehicle paperwork, according to Provost Marshal Office.

"We see so many cars on this base that are towed because of sheer irresponsibility," said Edward Williams, retired master sergeant, police officer of special enforcement for the PMO.

One of the most irresponsible acts that the office witnesses is illegal parking, said Williams.

"I have seen cars parked in some of the most bizarre places that people have no excuse parking. It's mostly people parking on the grass or in areas that they know are not authorized for parking," commented Williams.

Sometimes illegal parking can be mistaken for abandonment when Marines take their plates off of their vehicles when going on temporary additional duty. "They do this to save money on their insurance, but PMO will consider that vehicle abandoned," said Williams.

PMO understands that there is a difference between abandonment and an immobilized or broken-down vehicle and will allow 72 hours from the time the sticker is adhered for the owner to move the vehicle from the road, said Williams.

"The owner of the vehicle is required to call the PMO desk sergeant to inform them about a disabled vehicle. Usually if they need more time to organize a tow or to fix a small problem PMO can arrange that, but a lot of the time people never even call to let us know that their vehicle is even stuck on the road," mentioned Williams.

Owners of vehicles also need to know that if there is a break down it must be

Working Dog Kennel receives donation

Cpl. Brandon R. Holgersen
Marine Corps Base

The Moore County Kennel Club of Pinehurst, N.C., donated 21 spill-proof bowls and heavy-duty leashes to the Marine Corps Base Military Working Dog Kennel Sept. 20 to show their appreciation for their hard work and dedication.

"We are overwhelmed with gratitude. This was a very gracious gift to the Marine Corps and we are very grateful," said Gunnery Sgt. William Pine, the kennel master for the kennels.

The kennel club members had given a similar donation two years ago when they donated washable dog beds, bowls and leashes, said Mary Ann Doiron-Phillips, with the Moore County Kennel Club.

The first donation was inspired by a letter from a Marine on Camp Lejeune to the club. Robert Forsyth, a member of the Moore County Kennel Club's board of directors and one of the first dog handlers in the Marine Corps, spearheaded the effort to get together the canine care packages, said Doiron-Phillips. The club contacted the base and found out what regulations and processes they had to follow to donate items.

Forsyth was the inspiration for the next donation when he reminded his club to not forget about the Marines after they had given a donation to Fort Bragg, said Doiron-Phillips.

Division Marines take hill: TV's 'One Tree Hill'

Cpl. Lucian Friel
2nd Marine Division

WILMINGTON, N.C. - Marines are becoming synonymous with roles in films such as "Jarhead" and "The Marine." However, 2nd Marine Division Marines recently made their way onto the small screen playing an important role in the filming of an episode of "One Tree Hill," a teen drama on the CBS Warner network.

The Marines were extras for Episode Six, which is scheduled to air in early November.

"This is the first time we have had Marines film with us in all four seasons," said actor/director Paul Johansson. "I knew we were doing a good job when I turned around and saw the gunny smiling as the actors were learning how the Marines moved and did their jobs."

One Marine in particular was especially excited to be a part of the show. "It was fantastic being that I'm such a big fan of the show," explained Sgt. Rhian Jackson, the supply chief for Headquarters Battery, 10th Marine Regiment.

"I got to see how the episodes are made and had a chance to meet the actors and actresses."

Cpl. Adam Testagrossa

Take one: Marines with 2nd Marine Division record cadence for sound. The Marines were extras on the television show "One Tree Hill."

Jackson, a Washington native, originally started watching the show because of its basketball theme and said after a few episodes he became hooked. He said the best thing about being a part of the show was that he was there and he could say he was.

The 1998 Westlake High School graduate was able to talk to some of the actors and ask them questions about what it's like to be on the show. "They were extremely nice and were willing to answer all kinds of questions which was unexpected because some people think they are just too good to do those types of things because they're famous," Jackson explained.

He was able to meet

Hilarie Burton, who plays Peyton, one of the main characters on the show. She explained the Marines' work ethic during filming. "Normally you have to corral the people around to get shots done, but with the Marines, they moved all around where they were told to go," Burton said.

The filming lasted all day in the sun, but the Marines' morale was high. According to Jackson, it was because they were going to be on national television, but also because Marines are tough. The Marines got a taste of what it's like to be in television. It's definitely not all glamour. "The hardest part of filming was all the takes we had to do," Jackson said. "I think we did every scene at least 10 times."

The cast and crew agreed the Marines' professionalism and cooperation was a huge asset to the filming. "We were thrilled to see how helpful the Marines were while we filmed here today," explained Johansson, looking at the Marines around him.

Episode Six is scheduled to air the first week in November at 9 p.m. EST on the CW network. The fourth season of "One Tree Hill" started Sept. 27. ■

Wood Hobby Shop offers creative outlet for service members and dependents

Cpl. Brandon R. Holgersen
Marine Corps Base

The smell of wood dust, a variety of professional woodworking tools and a combined 150 years of woodworking knowledge are what Marines and sailors will find at the Wood Hobby Shop located on Birch St. next to the Auto Body Hobby Shop.

The facility is set up as a cabinet workshop, equipped to handle any job from an entertainment center or chest of drawers to pine box derby cars and table legs, said Jack Neuber the manager of the shop.

The shop has recently added a new table saw, which has a safety feature that causes the blade to stop and drop into the table if it comes in contact with skin or flesh, so no permanent damage is done, said Neuber.

Along with having the right tool for the job, the shop also carries 12 different types of domestic woods at discount prices sold by the board foot, said Neuber.

"No one in the local community carries the wood we have here at the prices we sell them," he said.

The wood shop carries furniture grade plywood, walnut, cherry, red oak, birch and medium density fiber board for making custom speaker boxes said Neuber.

Building a speaker box is both cheap and practical because it allows a person to get a quality product that is a custom fit for their vehicle without spending a lot of money, said Neuber.

Speaker boxes are not the only thing that can be made. The shop also carries a variety of plans for different projects, said Neuber. People have built everything from furniture to canoes.

One of the big benefits of the hobby shop is the ability to build quality furniture that will last and not have it be a strain on the wallet, said Eddie Vasquez, a shop attendant.

"A lot of people are realizing that they are spending $300 on something that is going to warp vice spending the same amount and building it and being able to pass it down," said Vasquez.

The holiday season is one of the busiest times for the Wood Hobby Shop because there are people who come in to make unique Christmas presents, said Vasquez.

The attendants at the shop can teach anyone the basics of woodworking and have beginners building their own projects in no time, said Vasquez. The first project they recommend building is a bookcase or an entertainment system because they contain the basic skeleton for making more complex pieces of furniture such as a chest of drawers.

"Simple is technique. It is not about size," said Vasquez. "If you can build a bookcase you can build anything."

Whatever the project might be, the shop attendants will be happy to help, said Vasquez.

"My philosophy is; plans were meant to be changed," said Vasquez. "You build what you want to build, not what someone printed on some plans."

The shop is a place to express creativity, create lasting and quality wood projects and the pride that comes with doing it by yourself, said Neuber.

While a project is being worked on it can be kept in the shop, but if the project has not been worked on in 30 days, the owner is asked to take the item, according to Neuber.

"We don't just arbitrarily throw things out. We try and contact the owner beforehand," he said.

Before anyone can work at the hobby shop, however, they must attend one of the safety courses, which involves an hour-long video on safety procedures, said Neuber. The class is given at 11:45 a.m. Wednesday through Friday and at 9:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. on the weekends.

For safety purposes, the age-limit for those allowed to work in the shop is 16 years.

For more information on the Wood Hobby Shop call 451-5191. The hours of operation are Wednesday through Friday, 11:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. and weekends, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. ■

'Who let the dogs out?' Strays on Camp Lejeune

Lance Cpl. Patrick M. Fleischman
Marine Corps Base

A dog is man's best friend is a common saying, but who's the dog's best friend when it strays?

Here, a stray's best friend is the Camp Lejeune Animal Control office. Animal control is responsible for the pick up and handling of hundreds of domestic stray animals on base, said 1st Lt. Gabriela T. Swanson, operations officer for the Provost Marshal's Office.

"We provide a place for them to stay, food and water for 24 hours until either the owner contacts PMO or they are sent to the Onslow County Animal Shelter. Camp Lejeune also covers the cost to the county for taking the animal in," said Jerry Cole, a police officer with special enforcement for the Provost Marshal's Office.

A stray dog can be dangerous. Last year, a large number of people were bitten by stray dogs aboard Camp Lejeune, said Swanson.

Any animal declared dangerous or potentially dangerous will be removed by animal control from the base at the direction of PMO. Owners are responsible for damage or injury to property, people and public buildings caused by their animals and are punishable by the Uniform Code of Military Justice, according to the base order 10570.1C.

Camp Lejeune sends 30 to 35 animals a month to the county shelter. More than 6,000 strays are taken to the Onslow County Animal Shelter, approximately 4,000 are euthanized while less than 2,000 are adopted, said Swanson.

"Unfortunately, if you don't take care of your animals and they do escape they are likely to be euthanized if sent to the county [shelter]," said Swanson.

Out of all of the animals picked up and sent to the county shelter, dogs make up the largest percent, said Swanson. "We want to get the word out that you are responsible for your dogs so we can bring the number of them sent to the county down."

When animals escape, they can injure people or destroy property. It can take the owners days to track their pet down if there is no collar, said Cole. "We hear a lot of 'my child ran outside, and the dog went out with them.' The next thing we hear is 'Have you seen my dog?'"

According to base order 10570.1C, all animals kept on base must wear a collar with the current address of the owner and a rabies vaccination tag. They must also have a microchip identification tag implanted under the animal's skin to ensure the animal can be identified in the case of a lost collar.

"We try to make every effort to locate the family that the animal belongs to, but we can only hold them for a short period of time. People need to know that this is a temporary storage facility," said Cole.

If an owner has to pick up an animal that was sent to the county animal shelter, the shelter will charge a sizable fee for the pick up and storage of their animal, added Cole.

"Animal shelters [and rescues] in Onslow County are overcrowded and we don't want the base to add to the problem," said Swanson.

A base housing problem, which leads to a lot of dogs being sent to the county, is the tying down of dogs to an object such as a tree, known as tethering. This is prohibited on base and leads to dogs escaping or biting people that come into the yard. It is also treated as animal cruelty under some circumstances, said Cole.

"Children are especially susceptible to bites while a dog is tethered because of their size and curiosity, as well as the usual lack of supervision by the owner while tethered. Most dogs are afraid of larger people and will only bark at them whereas with children they feel that they are more powerful than a child and may bite," added Cole.

There are several animal bite cases a month and some are very vicious. "People need to maintain accountability for their animals, anyone receiving a bite needs to go to the Camp Lejeune Naval Hospital immediately to have the bite inspected and a medical report filed. If no report is filed, PMO and animal control cannot file a report against a possibly dangerous animal," added Swanson.

If you discover a stray domestic animal on base, contact 451-2695 for animal control. If there is an emergency situation regarding an animal, contact the Military Police Desk Sergeant at 451-3004. ■

Then there could be four female instructors for each company.

The instructors work more than 100 hours a week, with little time off during a cycle of Marines, said Weiss. But, the job is very gratifying.

"All of it's worth it because it's a very rewarding job," said Sgt. Kristin S. Jochums, a combat instructor with Company G, MCT. "Hopefully I will be able to give them a good impression of what a female Marine is."

Not only do the Marines get to help shape and pass on their knowledge to the future leaders of the Marine Corps, they also get to work with a very tight knit group of Marines, said Jochums.

Although the job is physically demanding, instructors get used to the pace of their job and the long hours and hikes become easier after time, said Jochums.

"The hikes are just a walk in the park now," said Jochums. "Now, it's like 'here we go on another stroll.'"

Becoming a combat instructor can also help a Marine's career, said Jochums. If a Marine is a corporal, they will receive 100 points on their composite score for sergeant. There are also six slots available per year for meritorious staff sergeants.

Marines who want to become combat instructors must meet the requirements specified by most special duty assignments, said Weiss. These include having at least three years left on contract being financially responsible, a non-commissioned officer or above and have a stable family.

"I would like to think that all my students know I love them," said Jochums. "They are the reason why I am here. It's what I re-enlisted for. Everyday when I wake up, I'm excited about my job." ■ at least three feet from the roadway otherwise it will be towed sooner, added Williams.

CAR

"Most of these problems stem from the lack of responsibility with the requirements to keep up a base parking permit," said Williams.

To retain a permit, the owner is required to have the vehicle properly registered, a valid state inspection, and that it is insured, said Williams.

"It's important to go down to the Department of Motor Vehicles when you change your insurance to have a new copy of your state registration printed with your updated policy. If you do not and the car is checked in a police officer's computer it will come up showing no insurance and the car will be tagged with a 'warning to be towed' sticker," added Williams.

It will always be cheaper for owners to park in approved areas, to let PMO know about broken-down vehicles and to keep the vehicle's paperwork current. Otherwise, they face the possibility of paying $60 to $70 for towing plus a $7 to $12 daily storage fee as well as other possible fees depending on how your vehicle has to be towed, concluded Williams. ■

The donation was also an opportunity for Forsyth to spend time with the Marines at the kennel and about his experiences World War II.

"We went over as an experimental platoon not knowing exactly what to do or how to train," said Forsyth. "It was trial and error. The troops at first were hard on us, but after Bougainville you couldn't find a Raider that didn't want to be with a dog."

Forsyth worked as a dog handler through World War II, training and working with scout and messenger dogs, which were donated or purchased from kennels. He was recalled during the Korean War. ■

The days of the ubiquitous big-tent circuses have come and gone and now only one troupe remains that is able to set up, entertain and move on in a single day. This Monday, the world's largest and only big-tent performers, Carson & Barnes Circus, will bring their city-block long big top to Camp Lejeune for two performances at the Marine Corps Exchange at 4:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

"We always enjoy playing at military installations for the military families," said Ben Trumble, circus media relations representative. "It's a great place for families, and the circus is really all about families."

Entertainment includes aerial trapeze featuring the Incredible Flying Fernandez Family, high wire featuring the Brothers from South America, motorcycle acrobatic teams, aerial ballet, Millers Majestic Prancing Ponies, jugglers, clowns and performing elephants, camels, dogs and horses. Another highlight of the show is a spectacular parade which features a salute to the United States, complete with beautiful hand-made costumes and animal blankets.

The four-generation Miller family has been running Carson & Barnes Circus for 68 years and is still heavily involved in the day-to-day operation and movement of the community. The morning of the show, the family and other workers unload, feed and water more than 100 exotic and domestic animals. Hundreds of stakes, poles and several miles of cables and ropes are laid out and prepared as the crew and trained elephants push, pull and lift the approximately 300-foot big top of the polyvinyl auditorium 40 feet into the air.

"People are welcome to come out Monday morning and watch us set up. It's free, it's a lot of fun and it's not so often you get to see elephants set up the largest tent in the world," said Trumble.

The event is open to the public and tickets are now on sale at $12 for adults and $6 for children 2-11 years old. Tickets may be purchased the day of the event at $16 for adults and $8 for children 2-11 years old (but turn to page 4D for a special coupon). Tickets are available for purchase at Camp Lejeune's and New River's MCX and information ticket and tour offices, online at www.carsonbarnescircus.com/BuyTicketsOnline.html or by calling 800-

'Beerfest' a rowdy romp, drunken doozy

'BEERFEST' (R)

"Beerfest" is a comedic tale of international beer-chugging competitions involving a motley team of American drunkards who goes for gulping gold at the secret olympics of beer drinking.

The Broken Lizard comedy group stars in this new comedy that proves revenge, like beer, is best served cold.

The popular group ("Super Troopers") is comprised of Jay Chandrasekhar, Kevin Heffernan, Steve Lemme, Paul Soter and Erik Stolhanske.

Brothers Todd and Jan Wolfhouse, played by Stolhanske and Soter, are sent to Germany on a mission to spread their grandfather's ashes at the Oktoberfest.

There, they stumble upon an underground beer game competition, called the Beerfest, the olympics of beer drinking, which is a super secret and centuries-old tradition.

At Beerfest, the brothers receive a less than warm welcome from their German cousins, the Von Wolfhousens. They shun Todd and Jan, slander their heritage and worst of all, drink them under the table.

Vowing to return in a year to defend their family honor, Todd and Jan assemble a ragtag dream team of beer drinkers and gamers.

The team consists of Barry Badrinath, played by Jay Chandrasekhar, a consummate skills player with a dark past; Phil Krundle, also called 'Landfill', played by Kevin Heffernan, who is a one man chugging machine; and Charlie 'Fink' Finklestein, played by Steve Lemme, a lab technician with a Masters degree in All Things Beer.

The team trains relentlessly with the inspiration of their Great Gam Gam, played by Chloris Leachman ("Spanglish," "Bad Santa," "Scary Movie 4"), and the support of Cherry, her caretaker, played by Mo'Nique ("Domino," "Soul Plane"). They use their hearts, minds and livers to drink faster, smarter and harder than they have ever before.

Also appearing with the Broken Lizard group is Will Forte ("Saturday Night Live") as Otto, the Yankee hater; Eric Christian Olsen ("Dumb and Dumber") as Gunter, the wise-cracking loudmouth; Nat Faxon ("Orange County") as Rolf, the tightly-wound instigator; Ralf Moeller ("Gladiator") as Hammacher and Gunter Schlierkamp ("Hulk") as Schlemmer, the muscle-bound, keg-lifting duo and Juergen Prochnow ("Das Boot") as Baron Wolfgang Von Wolfhausen.

Director Jay Chandrasekhar ("The Dukes of Hazzard," "Broken Lizard's Club Dread," "Super Troopers") was again hard at work to bring us this hilarious spoof.

"Beerfest" is a simple and rowdy pleasure one can indulge in without getting involved.

"THE GUARDIAN" (PG-13)

"The Guardian" is an action movie about the never-before-seen world of the U.S. coast guard rescue swimmers.

It is a riveting white-knuckle story of hardcore courage and selfless sacrifice of a special brand of men and women who risk their lives against the biggest storms and most monstrous waves in service to the motto: "So others may live!"

Kevin Costner ("Upside of Anger," "Open Range," "Tin Cup") stars as the legendary veteran, Ben Randall, who is struggling with life on the water after losing his crew in an accident.

Randall is sent to teach at "A" School, an elite training program for Coast Guard Rescue Swimmers.

Wrestling with the loss of his crew members, he throws himself into teaching, turning the program upside down with his unorthodox training methods.

Ashton Kutcher ("Guess Who," "A Lot Like Love") costars as the arrogant and cocky rookie Jake Fischer, an expert swimmer who is training for the elite military unit of the Coast Guard.

Jake is driven to be the best, and Randall becomes Jake's mentor and helps to mold his character, combining raw talent with the heart and dedication required for a Rescue Swimmer.

Upon graduation, Jake follows Randall to Kodiak, Alaska, where they face the inherent dangers of the Bering Sea.

In his initial solo rescue, Jake learns first hand from Randall, the true meaning of heroism and sacrifice, echoing the swimmer's motto.

Also appearing are Clancy Brown ("Dead Man Walking") as Captain William 'Bill' Hadley; Neal McDonough ("Walking Tall") as Jack Skinner; John Heard as Frank Larson; Brian Geraghty ("Stateside") as Hodge; Bonnie Bramlett as Maggie McGlone; Melissa Sagemiller as Jake's love interest; and Sela Ward ("The Day After Tomorrow") as Helen Randall.

Director Andrew Davis ("Holes," "Collateral Damage," "The Fugitive," "Under Siege") brings us the "Top Gun" of the Coast Guard with great moments and lots of dangerous water action.

The location of the filming had to be moved from New Orleans to Shreveport due to Katrina, and many of the film's advisers became part of the storm's rescue team. A portion of this film was also shot in Alaska.

The film gives us strong characters and Costner as the seasoned actor comes through with flying colors and gives Kutcher a decent performance in his first serious role.

"The Guardian" poses the question: "How do you decide who lives or dies?" The filmmakers had the cooperation of the military and came up with an exciting and thrilling adventure of man versus nature.

"FLYBOYS" (PG-13)

"Flyboys" is a war drama and an adventure tale of young Americans who flew with the French military in a unit

'Beerfest': A team of American drunkards faces off against their German cousins and goes for gulping gold at the secret olympics of beer drinking.

called the Lafayette Escadrille before the U.S. entered World War I.

The movie begins long before the U.S. joins in the war.

In 1914, World War I began in Europe and by 1917, the Allied powers of France, England, Italy and others were on the ropes against the Germans.

Some young Americans disagreed with the war and volunteered to fight alongside their counterparts in France, some in infantry, some in the Ambulance Corps.

A handful of others decided to learn how to fly and become combat pilots. The first, a squadron of only 38, became known as the Lafayette Escadrille.

James Franco ("Annapolis," "The Great Raid," "City by the Sea") stars as Blaine Rawlings, a small town boy from Texas who is inspired by a newsreel chronicling the adventures of young aviators in France. He volunteers for the French military and learns how to fly.

Jean Reno ("The Da Vinci Code," "The Pink Panther") portrays the stern squadron Captain Thenault who trains these volunteers, along with the flying ace Cassidy, played by Martin Henderson ("Pride and Prejudice") the only survivor of an earlier class.

Jennifer Decker ("Cobb") can be seen as a French farm girl who hooks up with Rawlings.

Costarring as the other American boys who become the world's first combat pilots are Philip Winchester as William Jensen from rural Nebraska, Tyrone Labine as the rich Briggs Lowry from New York, David Ellison as Beagle whose spy suspect and Abdul Salis as Eugene Skinner, a black expatriate boxer living in France.

Director Tony Bill ("Beyond the Call," "Untamed Heart," "Six Weeks," "The Bodyguard"), who is an avid flyer, pays tribute to the last honorable form of warfare.

The movie is based on a true story of the World War I aviation group, the Lafayette Escadrille.

"Flyboys" shows magnificent aerial combat scenes bringing the audience into the fierce and dangerous dog fighting; that, and the history lesson, makes this movie worth watching.

Realtors tell us that the three most important words in real estate are "location, location and location." In marriage, I suggest that the three most important words are "listen, listen and listen." Listening is being equity in a marital relationship; listening is an investment in the marriage that increases the value of the relationship.

The number one complaint I hear from couples in marriage counseling or at a marriage workshop is, "My spouse does not listen." Most accused spouses react with surprise and denial when confronted with their "lack of listening skills." What is unrecognized is that 70 percent of communication is said to be non-verbal. The spouse who responds by saying, "I do listen," may indeed hear the words but the non-verbal communication states loudly and clearly that he/she is not interested. The picture couples present to me is a spouse watching television or reading a book and responding to the spouse with grunts or "yeah," but not once making eye contact or communicating interest. Do that to a child and the child will deliberately stand in front of the TV or pull at the book indicating, "I need more than a grunt, I need your attention, I need to know you care, I need to know you love me."

In marriage workshops we teach a simple technique. When one spouse is talking, the other stops what he/she is doing, looks (makes eye contact) at the person and actively listens (hears, gives feedback, questions, affirms, etc.). The focused attention and eye contact alone contributes significantly to effective communication. Without a word being spoken, the spouse has communicated "you are important to me" and this opens the door for dialogue. Listening is a skill that can be learned; if it is not learned and practiced in relationships, the equity in the marriage suffers loss. ■

Tips on setting the stage for a quick home sale

Lauren Halagarda
Special to THE GLOBE

Do you dread having strangers traipsing through your home for weeks or months and being constantly inconvenienced by agents and buyers, only to worry if your home will sell and if you'll get the price you are hoping for?

In order to minimize the time on the market and maximize the selling price of your house you need to set the stage. Home staging is an industry term for the process many real estate agents and home staging professionals go through to help improve the value of your home to get it ready to put on the market.

Many professional home stagers will say that the service they provide costs less than a price reduction when selling your home and eliminates the need for one. Studies show that staged homes sell in about half the time with an average increase in sale price of about 6-7 percent in contrast to their non-staged counterparts.

Change how you think about your home

Halagarda

It is no longer your home — it is a product that you are trying to sell. You can decorate your home however you choose but you need to create an environment that appeals to the highest number of buyers to sell your house quickly and for top dollar.

Do the work for them

Many sellers think that the buyers should be able to visualize what their house will look like once their imprint has been removed. After all, it shouldn't matter what your furniture looks like or that there are boxes or collections scattered everywhere. Many people have a difficult time visualizing how things will look and even if they can visualize they also visualize all of the work involved in getting it to where they want it. This causes them to deduct from your asking price as they go. Don't make them work so hard, do the work for them.

Here are five areas that you can focus on to improve the value of your home, before putting it on the market, that often cost very little to nothing:

Improve your curb appeal

Make sure the landscaping is clean and well maintained. Mow and edge the lawn, remove grass clippings, weed and clean out garden beds. Trim back overgrown bushes. Sweep or pressure-wash the walkways and driveways. Remove any and all unnecessary vehicles, boats, motorcycles, basically anything not included in the sale. Clean or paint the front door.

Do some deep cleaning

I mean really clean your house. Take the extra steps necessary to deep clean every surface, window, every corner and make it shine. Eliminate unwanted odors, especially pet related. Clean the dirt and grunge from the walls, moldings, doors and doorways.

Get rid of the clutter

I know, I know, your treasured belongings are not clutter — to you anyway. You are going to be moving soon anyway, so why not start packing? Pack up collections, knickknacks and other display or decorative items, especially those that appeal to specific tastes. That means the bowling trophies, talking fish plaque and taxidermy collection need to go.

Create more space

Eliminate 50 percent of what is in your closets and cabinets in order to create more space. Countertops and other horizontal surfaces should be clean and clear of clutter. Pack away out-of-season items and clothing or anything you are not using and store it out of the house.

Make cosmetic and functional repairs

Fix leaky faucets and squeaky or sticking doors. Replace peeling wallpaper and caulk tubs and windows. Touch up paint throughout your house. A fresh coat of paint costs very little and can do wonders — but make sure it is not a sloppy job or it can end up making things look worse.

Keep in mind that buyers are trying to visualize themselves living in the house and the extra effort now will pay off in the long run because your house will sell much quicker and for more. The more you do to stage your home the more likely you are to secure a quicker sale.

Lauren Halagarda is a Jacksonville-based member of the National Association of Professional Organizers and the Jacksonville/Onslow Chamber of Commerce. To ask her a question or find out more information on staging your home, call 581-1255, or e-mail Info@2OrganizeU.com. Comedian Kier takes the stage for OWC fundraising event

Amy Segreti
Staff reporter

There are a lot of festivals in eastern North Carolina. Shrimp festivals, spot festivals, wine festivals, you name it. But every now and then, you just need a laugh.

At least, that's what Tricia Winklosky, head of publicity at the Officers' Wives' Club, thought when she was the fundraising chair three years ago and she contacted comedian Kier (yes, he goes by only one name).

"This was around the time when there was a huge deployment to Iraq, and we all thought we needed to bring in a comedian," said Winklosky. "He came when we really needed him, when we all really needed to support each other. And he was fantastic."

The comedy show attendees loved Kier so much that the OWC brought him back that fall. Now he'll be back for the third time Oct. 13 and 14 at the Midway Park Theatre as part of a fundraising event organized by Bonnie Audsley and Mirka Young, co-fundraising chairs at OWC.

"We look for clean acts and something that can cross boundaries. We want it to be accessible to people of all ages," said Winklosky. "And Kier's just like the guy you grew up with down the street."

Kier's acts are a mix of genres. He has done comedy, musical acts and speaking gigs around the world for the past 25 years and his variety is what made Winklosky give him that first call.

"He gets up and does these musical impressions of different artists, like James Taylor and you get the chills because they're so on target," said Winklosky. "Then he'll do funny impersonations too, like of Prince."

Kier will be coming to the theatre having just returned from a tour with the Navy Morale, Welfare and Recreation in the Mediterranean. "Our recommendation helped him to get that gig. Some of our guys probably saw him on that ship, and their wives can see him here," said Winklosky.

"He's really excited to be here, and we're really excited to have him back to raise money for our charities," said Winklosky. The OWC's primary goal is raising money for the community, and the funds raised from the comedy show will go towards members of their Charitable Donations Fund, including American Red Cross, the Injured Marine Semper Fi Fund, Navy Relief, Ronald McDonald House and the Onslow Community Ministries, to name a few.

The show is open to all hands — base employees, all ranks, etc. — and each person is allowed to bring one guest. Admission charge is $18 and the reservation deadline is Friday.

"If we get a few stragglers over the weekend, we can probably let them reserve," said Winklosky. "But we strongly urge people to reserve by the deadline."

For reservations or more information, contact Helen LeBlanc at 355-9494 or go to Hidden Talents next to Subway on Holcomb Blvd. ■

Camp Lejeune hosts free job fair for Marines

Everett Vaughn
Special to THE GLOBE

Opportunity awaits at the Camp Lejeune Job Fair, which will be held Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. This year's job fair will be held at two locations: Goettge Memorial Field House and the Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune.

The Camp Lejeune Job Fair is the largest job fair in the area. "We are estimating between 150 to 170 different companies and thousands of job seekers to attend. There will be a lot of space for both companies and job seekers, thus making a comfortable setting. This is why we are hosting the fair at two locations," said Tuthill.

Transition program specialist. To assist in the traffic flow, signs for the job fair will be posted at Goettge Memorial Field House. There will be shuttles that will transport seekers to and from Goettge Memorial Field House and the Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune. There will be parking permitted at the Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune.

Over the years, the Camp Lejeune Job Fair has developed a reputation with local, regional, national and worldwide companies for not only producing a large prospect pool but also those with desirable skills. "Many employers who have attended the Camp Lejeune Job Fair have found that military personnel are extremely loyal, hardworking, dependable, and great at problem solving. They also have leadership experience, enthusiasm and an overall strong work ethic," said Tuthill.

Because of the success of providing companies with a valuable recruiting opportunity, they are referring other companies to the job fair. "Some of the companies being referred to us have never recruited aboard a military installation. However, because of what they have heard of the success of other companies, they plan on attending," added Tuthill.

Sally Hart, National Military Recruiting Director, Cintas Corporation has been attending the Camp Lejeune Job Fair for the past 15 years. "I would not miss it. I do everything in my power to attend the Camp Lejeune Job Fair. Our company is based out of Cincinnati. We have 412 locations in 43 states. We are growing and doubling in size. In order to be successful, we need to recruit people who are hands-on, lead from the front, [and who] don't mind getting their hands dirty. People need employees who can learn our business and be promoted on their performance. Our founding father is a former Marine. He has developed a company culture that is very compatible with the military lifestyle so that the people we recruit from Camp Lejeune are able to make an easy transition. What makes the Camp Lejeune Job Fair a 'must attend' for us is the fact that it is well organized and they offer great candidates that are well prepared. We are not looking for any specific MOS. We look for personality, people who are customer focused, friendly, hard working and overachievers. That is what we get from the Camp Lejeune Job Fair," added Hart.

"We want to ensure that we have a diverse company representation at the Camp Lejeune Job Fair. There will be companies representing a wide variety of industries and services. Some of the positions being recruited include: managers and trainees, truck drivers, mechanics, law enforcement, information technology specialists, firefighters, administration, healthcare, logistics, technicians, counselors, teachers, avionics and so much more," said Tuthill.

Tuthill gives these words of advice to job seekers: "First, the Camp Lejeune Job Fair is not a place for children. If you want to be taken seriously, do not bring children. The company will want your undivided attention."

We look for personality, people who are customer focused, friendly, hard-working and overachievers.

Sally Hart
National Military Recruiting Director

Second, treat this event like you are going to an interview at the company's physical location. Third, bring multiple copies of your professional-looking resumes. Fourth, dress to impress. We recommend that you show up in the proper attire. Yet companies do understand that those attending are active duty and are on their work break so uniform of the day is appropriate. We want to ensure that people are prepared for the job fair. The Career Resource Management Center offers varieties of workshops that ensure a successful transition from the military to the civilian sector."

For more information on employers represented and types of positions they will be recruiting for, go to the www.mcslejeune.com Web site. The listing will be made available at the end of September and updated regularly.

This event is free and open to active-duty service members, civilians, and Coastal Carolina Community College students. For more information, call 451-3212, ext. 213. ■
