Retired generals return to Lejeune

Sgt. Charlene A. Getchell

Gen. Leonard F. Chapman, Jr., 24th Commandant of the Marine Corps and other retired Marines, their spouses and civilians came to Camp Lejeune for the semi-annual meeting of the Marine Corps Command and Staff College Foundation trustees. The former Marines stayed here for two days to tour the area, and although the weather was unpleasant, the tour started off early in the morning. The group loaded themselves on a bus and headed off to the School of Infantry. The MK-19, being relatively new to the Marine Corps, received a lot of interest from the group. Retired Maj. Gen. Robert D. Bohn was offered, and grasped the opportunity to fire the weapon.

Governor of Bermuda honors Beirut's dead

Sgt. Charlene A. Getchell

Desmond Langley, Governor of Bermuda, laid a wreath in honor of the Marines who died in Beirut at the Beirut Memorial here recently. Langley took an active part helping the Marine Corps immediately after the 1983 bombing of the barracks in Beirut. At that time the governor was the Administrator of Sovereign Base Areas and Commander of British Forces in Cyprus. He had a key role in aiding the United States with the evacuation of wounded Marines from Beirut. His position had great significance, as Cyprus was a strategic point between Beirut and the United States.

Three of the Beirut veterans whom Sir Langley helped to evacuate in 1983 were at the ceremony to greet the governor. Master Sgt. R. L. Jones, manager of the Bachelor Enlisted Quarters for Marine Corps Base; Gunnery Sgt. O. E. Hunt, 5th Bn., 10th Marines; and Cpl. J.E. Oliver, Bravo Co., 1st Bn, 8th Marines attended the ceremony.

"I'm glad I was able to meet here today three of the Marines I helped in 1983," Sir Langley said.

This wasn't the governor's first visit to the memorial. He first visited the memorial casually because he didn't know it was there. This time he came to pay homage to the Marines who were killed in the bombing.

"I thought it was time to express my sorrow about the tragedy that befell the Marines in Beirut," the governor said.

Sir Langley expressed his feelings toward the Marines who died in Beirut by laying a wreath at the memorial, and in return, the Marine Corps expressed its sentiments with a ceremony honoring the governor at W. P. T. Hill Field.

The honors ceremony turned out to be an emotionally moving occasion for the governor. "I've been to quite a few ceremonies before, but nothing can compare to the one the Marine Corps gave to me today. . . I shall always remember it," Sir Langley said.

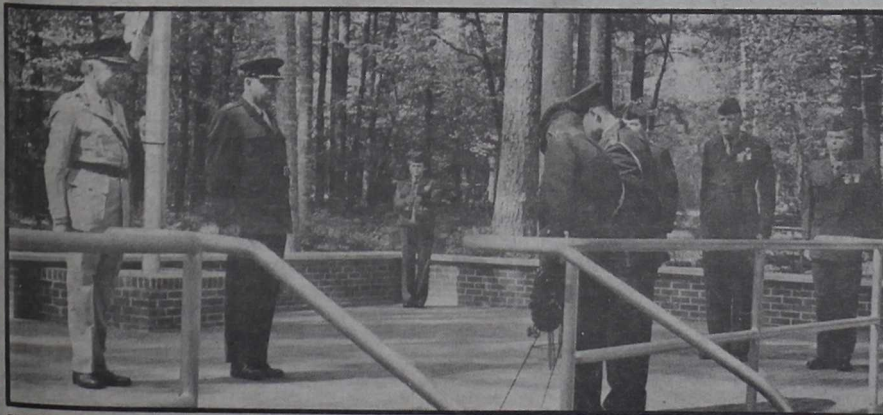

The wreath-laying and honor ceremony wasn't the culmination of the governor's visit; he also spent some time visiting a company of the Bermuda Regiment who are training at Camp Lejeune.

Charlie Co., Bermuda Regiment, was training at Camp Lejeune's Combat Town when their governor paid them a visit. The regiment's use of Lejeune's training facilities didn't go unnoticed by the governor.

"This is a great opportunity for our troops to train with live ammunition. In Bermuda, we don't have the room for that type of training," the governor explained.

Although the governor's visit to Lejeune only lasted two days, this won't be his last visit. "I shall look forward to visiting Lejeune again," he said.

During this visit the governor was able to sample the Corps' formal ceremonies and its field training. He brought with him the painful memories of the Beirut bombing and will go away with a sense of camaraderie between his warriors and the U.S. Marine Corps.

WREATH LAYING— Sir Desmond Langley, governor of Bermuda, accompanied by Maj. Gen. Donald R. Gardner, CG, MCB, watch as a wreath is laid at the Beirut Memorial.

In my opinion

The recent efforts by Maj. Gen. Donald R. Gardner to help reduce auto insurance rates for those Marines who live on base should be applauded and warmly appreciated by all those affected.

What better way to show our appreciation than to start driving like we deserve lower rates?

All too often I have overheard one Marine asking another for a ride, explaining with a wide grin that his own car isn't available, "because I totaled it last week."

That car wouldn't have been totaled if the Marine hadn't been speeding, switching lanes and cutting people off without using turn signals, running stop signs, paying attention to his driving and driving soberly.

I understand there's quite a bit of machismo involved in driving a "hot car." Owning a souped-up sports car is part of an American male ideal that has been nurtured since the 1950s. But that doesn't give anyone license to drive his or her Turbo like Top Gun.

I own what is termed a "sports car." I do not have a single traffic violation on my record, either — and my insurance rates reflect that.

The main reason those rates for Marines aboard Camp Lejeune were so much higher to begin with is the fact that so many more hot-dogging single drivers live aboard base — and are involved in a higher percentage of accidents than those Marines who live off base. I, for one, kind of like the fact that I don't have to spend all my time putting my car in the body shop for repairs. I use that money for other things.

I'm sure a lot of the younger Marines who read this will laugh it off as "just another brown nose making points." So I'll also make an appeal to the rascals: make your Marines aware of their responsibilities on the road. Put as much emphasis on speeding, reckless driving and other traffic citations as you do on bad checks and other disciplinary problems.

After all, breaking traffic laws is a sign of discipline."

FOREIGN MADE— Foreign manufactured assault weapons like these are illegal to import in the United States. The countries of origin from top to bottom are: Greece, West Germany, China and Egypt.

As the battle over the private ownership of assault weapons continues to rage on, sportsmen and gun dealers alike are scrambling to buy up what few of the weapons remain on the market.

What they are finding is that the prices of the guns have skyrocketed amid speculation that an all-out ban on the controversial weapons is imminent.

Jacksonville gun shop owner Chris Rice has called weapons distributors nationwide in an effort to fill his customers' demands. Rice discovered that the AK-47 rifles he could purchase wholesale for $295 were now selling for more than $500.

"The AK-47s just aren't available at any kind of reasonable price," Rice said. "I know of other dealers who are charging customers $900 retail for AKs. They were asking $360 before the import ban."

The extensive media coverage concerning the weapons has helped fuel rumors as to how extensive the government restrictions on the weapons will be.

There was speculation on Camp Lejeune that the Hadnot Point Main Exchange had been ordered to remove AR-15 rifles from their shelves. The AR-15 is the semiautomatic version of the M-16A2 service rifle.

The rumors started the morning after the manufacturer of the AR-15 announced it would halt sales of the weapons to the general public.

The misconception came about through sheer coincidence, according to assistant exchange officer 1st Lt. Tim Womack.

"Our security manager Edward Kemis viewed a AR-15 news report. The following morning he asked the sales people how many of the rifles were in stock. At the same time he was inquiring, the only AR-15 we had in stock was being purchased. When the sales clerk removed it from the rifle rack, people just assumed the exchange had been ordered to stop selling the weapons," Womack said.

Womack stated "we receive no direction as to what type of weapons we sell. No order, written or verbal, has been issued to us about sales of the AR-15."

Mike Dunn, a spokesman for the firm that makes the AR-15, said his company voluntarily halted the sales to "keep with the spirit of the president's policy of trying to control firearms violence." Until last year the company made the M16A2 for the U.S. military. A foreign corporation won the most recent bidding and makes the weapons under license.

Aside from the temporary import ban by federal authorities, local governments and law enforcement officials across the country are increasing their efforts to place more restrictions on the weapons or to outlaw their ownership by private citizens.

Fortunately police in Jacksonville have not yet experienced incidents involving assault rifles.

Jacksonville deputy police chief I Collins has mixed feelings about weapons. "I'm not real thrilled about having those types of guns on the streets," Collins said. "But I can see both sides of the coin. Constitutionally speaking, I support an honest citizen's right to own weapons," he added.

Collins expressed his ideas on how to protect a citizen's 2nd Amendment right while making it more difficult for criminals to obtain the rifles.

"I think a waiting period and background investigation should be mandatory to purchase one of those weapons. And the buyer should have to pay for an investigation," he said. Collins feels the stricter requirements and the increased prices will discourage criminals from obtaining the rifles through legal channels.

The future of private ownership of weapons appears dim. As violence on the streets rises, the cause of those who support outlawing them gains support.

News briefs . . .

New smoking order

A new Base Order is changing things for smokers at Camp Lejeune. According to Base Order 6200.3A, smoking is prohibited in common work areas, and special areas are designated for personnel who desire to smoke. In addition to work spaces, smoking is prohibited in auditoriums, conference rooms, classrooms, gymsnasiums and official vehicles. The change isn't something that came about overnight. The changes came about from a Department of Defense directive that the military services enact programs to discourage use of tobacco products and provide smokers with encouragement and professional assistance to stop smoking. However, for personnel who do smoke, they are allowed to do so in designated areas and private offices and rooms, as long as they adhere to applicable rules and regulations. Designated smoking areas are posted in all eating facilities, as long as it does not interfere with non-smokers and there is adequate ventilation. In addition to smoking areas that are designated, health care education programs concerning tobacco will be sponsored to encourage tobacco users to continue use. The new tobacco policy applies to all Department of the Navy personnel, dependents and visitors while at MCB buildings and facilities as well as to civilian employees. Some smokers might think that the order is designed to discriminate against those who do "light up," but the order has been coordinated with the CGs of MEF, MCB, 2nd MarDiv, and 6th MEB as well as the COs of the Naval Hospital, Naval Dental Clinic, MCAS New River, OIC, Naval Personnel Support Detachment and the director of the East Coast Commissary Complex.

Forest resources

In a low, wet site at Camp Lejeune, hardened by the thunder of heavy artillery below the scream of flying fighter bombers and helicopter operations, the Marine Corps has quietly taken steps to hasten the return of a vanishing tree. Foresters from the base and the state planted Atlantic White Cedar (Juniper) seedlings April 12, part of a three-year study by the N.C. Division of Forest Resources, N.C. Forestry Extension and Weyhouser Corporation. The object of the study is to develop ways to help the Atlantic White Cedar restore its range in eastern North Carolina. Atlantic White Cedar, commonly called Juniper, has declined rapidly in North Carolina wetland areas in recent years. Atlantic White Cedar is one of the most valuable trees on the East Coast for shipbuilding because of its light weight and its resistance to decay. Today it is estimated that the Atlantic White Cedar has declined 90 percent from its original range in North Carolina.

Camp Lejeune is one of five sites for the Atlantic White Cedar study. The other four sites are Hofman Forest in Onslow County as well as Bertie County, Chowan County and in Greene County. By planting and testing the seedlings at these sites, study group members hope the return of the Atlantic White Cedar will help in the future management of wetland areas.

Law Day

"Law Day USA" will be observed aboard Camp Lejeune in May. The occasion has been declared by Presidential Proclamation and Joint Resolution of Congress as a "special day of celebration . . . to provide all Americans with the opportunity to appreciate our liberties and rededicate ourselves to equality and justice under the law."

Throughout history, Marines have fought and died to protect and preserve the Constitution they have sworn to uphold as a beacon of hope and opportunity which has shined for more than 200 years.

The role of law in the lives of American people is much like that of service regulations in the lives of Marines and sailors—to promote peaceful cooperation in resolving problems and accomplishing the daily mission.

As part of a nationwide observance of "Law Day USA" during May, the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Marine Corps Base and the Legal Services Support Section, 2nd FSSG will be sponsoring activities in observance of Law Day. Programs sponsored by local Marine judge advocates in will include an information booth at the Main Exchange, appearances on the Lejeune Report which will explain the mission of the Consolidated Legal Assistance Office.

For more information, contact the Consolidated Legal Assistance Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at 451-1903 or the Legal Services Support Section at 451-2808.

Auto territory revisions

Insurance Commissioner Jim Long has ordered that rating territories for car insurance be revised for the Charlotte/Mecklenburg area and for areas including the state's military bases.

The order will reduce rates for 71 percent of Mecklenburg residents and combines the city of Charlotte with areas of the county are considered Charlotte suburbs, including Pineville, Matthews, and Mint Hill.

Long said that because of such factors as driving patterns and population density, these areas should be included in the Charlotte territory.

The order also merged each of the state's five military installations into a surrounding territory: Fort Bragg and Pope Air Force Base with Fayetteville, MCAS Cherry Point with the rest of Craven County, Camp Lejeune with the rest of Onslow County, and Seymour Johnson Air Force Base with Goldsboro and the rest of Wayne County.

Before the order, North Carolina was the only state in which military personnel living on base paid higher rates than those living off the base. By merging the bases with surrounding territories, Long said, "People will no longer be penalized for living on the base."

Reductions in rates will average 28.8 percent for Cherry Point drivers, 27.6 percent at Camp Lejeune, 20.5 percent at Fort Bragg and Pope AFB, and 30.4 percent for drivers at Seymour Johnson AFB. The effect on rates for surrounding areas range from zero to a 4 percent increase.

Long required that the revisions, to become effective in six months, not produce any more or any less revenue for the insurance industry. He also said the changes reflect his intent to review territorial boundaries more frequently.

"More frequent adjustments will be necessary," Long said, "to make sure that drivers aren't paying more than their fair share of insurance industry losses."

Former Marines enjoy three-day tour of Lejeune

Visit—

"It's an outstanding weapon. It's got to give a Marine a lot of confidence," the general said. He also commented on the Marine Combat Training course. "When I was the commanding general of Marine Corps Base, we had training similar to this. Today, the Marines have it better. All the changes I've seen here have been for the best."

The VIPs ate Meals Ready to Eat with MCT students under the shelter of an outdoor classroom.

"We had K-rations on Guadalcanal," said retired Brig. Gen. James F. Lawrence. "This beef stew tastes just like the beef stew we used to have," the general told Pfc. John S. Allen an MCT student.

Although a look of nervousness crossed Allen's face when the retired general chose a seat next to him, the general's warm smile and easygoing nature soon whisked that barrier away. Soon Allen was entirely engrossed with the general's stories about battles at Guadalcanal and the Chosin Reservoir.

"This is great! Its like getting history firsthand," Allen said.

Three weeks of training bring Marines back to basics

Story and photos by
Cpl. Paul Schneider

On a freezing North Korean night in November 1950, an Army transport bat-

PROBING— A Marine from Bravo Co., 8th Engineer Support Bn., probes for a possible mine after a mine sweeper picked up a tone in that area.

CONVOY ON THE MOVE— An 8th Motor Transport Bn. convoy moves on an unsecured road with members of the battalion patrolling ahead of it for aggressors.

talion of 400 soldiers was returning from delivering an artillery battalion to the front lines when the convoy was ambushed, explained Burke Davis in the book "Marine! the Life of Chesty Puller."

The drivers left their vehicles and ran because they didn't know how to fight, giving up to a six-man Chinese patrol. The Chinese patrol destroyed the vehicles and killed many of the drivers, Davis said.

The enemy patrol then attacked the artillery battalion's rear. The battalion abandoned its positions and the Chinese captured all of the guns, Davis explained. In the same area of operations, the Chosin Reservoir, the Chinese had major problems with a different breed of American fighting men — elements of the 1st Marine Division.

During the Chinese First Phase Offensive, the goal of which was to determine the strength of U.N. forces in North Korea, the Chinese had overwhelming victories everywhere except in an area near the Chosin Reservoir, according to Eric Hammel in the book "Chosin Heroic Ordeal of the Korean War."

On the road to the Chosin Reservoir, several Chinese divisions were soundly defeated by the 7th Marine Regiment, Hammel said.

The difference between the Marine Corps and the Army was that all Marines, no matter what MOS, were Marines first. All Marines knew how to fight, Hammel explained.

After the Vietnam War, the public wanted a smaller military, and as a result, military budgets started to shrink. The Marine Corps, in order to save money, stopped sending every Marine through infantry training.

Around the Corps these days, though, all a Marine hears about is getting back to the basics. The Commandant brought back the idea that every Marine is a warrior first.

Getting back to basics is what Lt. Col. Orvis R. Doyle, CO of 8th Motor Transport Bn., had in mind when he brought his battalion to the area near LZ Eagle for almost three weeks of training.

The first two weeks consisted of infantry and field MOS training, with the last two days of the exercise being the final test for the Marines. During the last few days the Marines ran 24-hour transport operations against an aggressor force.

"The last two days we ran tactical convoys and provided rear area security day and night," explained Capt. Howard Buescher, battalion S-3. "On the convoys the Marines were practicing immediate action in the event of ambush or attack."

"We've had some minor problems with breakdowns in communication. That's why we came out here — to make mistakes and learn, he said.

Of special note to Buescher was the skill of the Marines, noting they ran excellent security patrols and were motivated to learn.

"It is refreshing to see the sergeants and corporals accepting and running mistakes that staff NCOs normally do," Buescher added. "They have been motivated to go out on a mission and learn. They know what they are doing out here because of Marine training along with MOS training," Buescher said.

The motor transport Marines were doing well against the aggressor force. They did have some problems.

"We were doing well at patrolling convoys, but we need to work on situational awareness in the defense," Buescher said. "One time we were overrun, but the next day we were able to hold them off," said Lance Cpl. Sean Sisarick, a driver.

All of the Marines in the battalion realize the importance of the training. Some even want to stay out in the field.

"I'm not really anxious to get back to the rear, because this is good training," Sisarick said. "I believe every Marine should possess these skills."

The time in the field for the 8th Motor Transport Bn. was a learning experience for everyone. The Marines accepted the additional challenge of learning how to be infantrymen.

The word warrior has become synonymous with Marine since the beginning of the Corps. The Commandant's return to basics programs are making it clear that it always will be. The Marine Corps concept of every Marine being an infantryman paid off in the Chosin Reservoir and it will pay off for the 8th Motor Transport Bn. if ever it finds itself in a combat environment.

Reservists fire through qualifications in two days

Another Nature must have been in a bad mood that the ice-cold wind blew across the field with no mercy as Marines begged their "wooly pullies" for a little warmth. But the cold temperatures didn't stop them. They had a mission, and they were going to complete it, cold or not.

During a recent visit, about 54 reservists from Headquarters and Service Co., 2nd MEB and 50 of their reserve counterparts from 4th and 5th Amphibious Shoreman platoons, 4th Landing Support Bn., Quantico, took to the rifle ranges to qualify.

So big deal right? Try doing the rifle and pistol in only two days.

It was hectic," said Capt. John A. Nicholson, the duty assistant liaison officer, 2nd MEB. "The Marines went full speed throughout the weekend."

As the sun rose on Saturday, the Marines were busy forming, and getting their equipment for the range. As the next hour or so went by, they listened intently to the words of expert coaches from the Marine Corps Base Marksmanship Training Unit, and their hints for "hitting the black."

instructor, said, "This concludes this block of instruction." The Reserve leathernecks knew the time was here to shoot.

"The Marines fired the Known Distance qualification course two times," Nicholson said. "Then they went to pull butts."

As the rounds continued to go downrange throughout the morning until late afternoon, coaches made corrections on body positions as well as windage and elevation adjustments.

"It was harder to show them the fundamentals of shooting again, but dope changes came easy," said Cpl. W.R. Smith Jr., marksmanship training instructor. "It was very fast-paced because we had to teach them in two days what we usually teach in a week, but they caught on quickly."

When Sunday rolled around, so did qualification day, and when all was said and done, the Marines qualified nine experts, 12 sharpshooters and 12 marksmen.

"All in all I think it was very successful," Nicholson said. "The Marines got invaluable training and they enjoyed it."

For those Marines who rate a pistol as their T/O weapon, staff NCOs and above, the day was not over.

They left the rifle range and set out for the D-29 range, where rounds, targets and the new 9mm service pistols awaited them.

After a safety brief and a short class about the weapon to refresh their memory, the range and the shooters "went hot."

"We ran four strings of 10 shooters," Nicholson said. "I was rather surprised at the scores because they were so high. It was probably due to the new pistol. We had 17 Marines qualify as pistol experts, nine as sharpshooters, and only three marksmen. You can't beat that for only a few hours of training."

Nicholson said if it had not been for the cooperation between commands the weekend would not have been as exciting and successful.

"Without the help of our fellow Marines, the Reservists would have been sitting around saying 'it sure would be nice to be qualifying,'" Nicholson concluded.

animals that can be just as lethal. After a relaxing transit of the Panama Canal aboard Army Landing Craft Mechanicals, the company settled in for a brief on the variety of inhabitants with whom they would be sharing the training area. Although the heated classroom threatened to claim its share of "victims," the Marines' attention was drawn to the screen where slides of the jungle's plant and animal life drew less than approving expletives.

Having been in country less than 48 hours, the first and potentially and threatening elements facing the Marines were the stifling heat and humidity. Most were concerned with the prospect of doing battle with the variety of insects. The collection of insects here includes a collection of killer bees, fire ants, wasps, hornets, various scorpions, centipedes, caterpillars, poisonous moths, 270 types of mosquitoes, spiders, vampire bats, lethal frogs and snakes that also call the jungle home. The lecture was followed by a highlight tour of the JOCT zoo, where jungle plant and animal life provided Marines with a "warm and fuzzy" for many of the native jungle inhabitants.

The seriousness of the Marine Force Panama mission was brought home to Bravo Co. during night reactionary training at Fort Sherman's Battery Pratt, an abandoned coastal artillery station. Instructors at six stations tested the Marines' situational awareness in various scenarios related to the Rules of Engagement which they would follow during their security mission at the Arrijan Fuel Storage Facility. Although the exercise capped-off several months of intense predeployment Rules of Engagement training which Bravo Co. had received at Camp Lejeune, it provided one last practice session in a jungle environment before they would return to the tank farm to do it for real.

"These Marines were extremely well prepared and did really well with the scenarios," said Capt. Tom Rumping, S-2 officer. "The discipline they showed and the way they reacted in the various situations we presented them is a tribute to the training they received before getting down here."

The company later staged a live-fire Rules of engagement scenario to put the skills honed during the earlier practice exercise to work. Uniformed targets stuffed with balloons were suspended on a pulley system downrange to give shooters an added element of realism while reacting to intruder scenarios using night vision goggles.

Day two of the JOTC training pitted the Marines, broken into squad-size elements, against the jungle in a land navigation exercise designated to drive home the difficulties of navigating in such an environment. The team were given nine hours to successfully navigate a four-leg route which covered roughly 3,000 meters.

Faced with some of the most rugged terrain in Panama, which restricted visibility to no more than 20 meters, each squad completed the course successfully. The squads were successful despite the fact it was the first time in the jungle for most of the Bravo Marines.

"It was an experience I won't ever forget anytime soon because it was my first time in the jungle," said Pfc. J.T. Casale. "The heat was definitely the worst thing to deal with. I was just pouring sweat the entire time. That last leg almost killed me . . . those hills were incredible!"

Selected NCOs and officers from the company later negotiated a night compass course, which added the dimension of total darkness to the problems encountered during the day.

The final day of training included a quick-fire range, which tested the marksmanship of even the most proficient shooters. Marines engaged bobbing targets and stationary silhouette targets from high (shoulder) and low (hip) weapon positions to test accuracy and reaction time.

Quick-fire is nothing to more than survival," said Army Staff Sgt. J. Williams, jungle warfare branch instructor. "It's the first step to building a foundation for close quarter and quick reaction marksmanship, and the sole purpose is to fire first so you can hit first."

No combat training would be complete without casualty evacuation training, which was the final phase of the JOTC package for the Marines of Bravo Co. Along with classes and hands on practice for makeshift litter construction and MEDEVAC request procedures, squads were required to negotiate a short course while carrying a Marine on a litter through the jungle. All hoped the skills learned here would never be practiced for real.

A short transit aboard LCMs along the Panama Canal to the U.S. Naval Station, on the Atlantic coast was the final part of Bravo's welcome to Panama. After departing Fort Sherman to embark on their three-month security mission, they assured themselves of one thing — every Bravo Marine's home is the jungle.

Network of cables keeps telephones ringing telephone junction box.

Curiously fixed to the junction box was a single black cable. Following this cable through the woods puts a person in the middle of LZ Jaybird, which was recently a spaghetti network of more cables and wires belonging to H&S Bn., 2nd FSSG. The lone cable was the unit's link for regular telephone service to the base and beyond.

More importantly, the site was a communications center for the battalion, which also had detachments at Molly Pitcher Field and MCCDC, Quantico, Va. The exercise was a prelude to what the battalion's job will be upcoming Solid Shield exercise.

It took most of the first day to establish lines of communication among the Field Message Center, Operations Center, Technical Control and the antenna location, according to Cpl. Adam Abdul, NCOIC of the FMC. "We've now established voice and pure data communications, which enables us to transmit and receive traffic," he said during the second day of the exercise.

"The FMC, or Communication Center is the heart of this operation," Abdul added. "From here, we're capable of tying into anywhere in the world."

Abdul stood between two primary tools of the message center ... teletypewriter machines on one side of him, and on the other, radio equipment with a unique, rectangular box with a display screen.

Sgt. Allen Bruce, watch supervisor, explained the small rectangular box. "With the digital communication terminal we're able to send short reports through the wire or VHF transmissions," he said. "The terminal holds several formats we use to send those reports. We just call up the format and type in the data."

But without the wireman, the communications center would find it rather difficult to function efficiently, if at all. These Marines are the ones who all the communication sections together — allow them to function as a harmonious team. They are also the only ones to make sense from all the spaghetti network of cable and wire that honeycombs the encampment.

"We distribute telephone lines and patch subscribers from one camp to another," Cpl. Scott Kichman, a construction wireman said.

In Kichman's left hand a "clutch sheet" told each subscriber's cable assignment was. "It enables us to correctly hook up each subscriber and cable to the junction box."

Kichman and his crew also produced the camp's internal wiring and hooked up the trunk route from the camp to the telephone junction box on Marine Road.

"This gives us an emergency land line to the outside world," Kichman said.

After the cable and wire were laid down, they connected to junction boxes at a specialized van. The van, an AN/TSQ84, acts as the technical control facility for the communications exercise.

The van works as a giant patch panel as circuits come in and are transferred out. From here, operators also troubleshoot the system and dispatch wiremen to the point of trouble.

During the exercise no major communications problems occurred, enabling radio and teletypewriter operators to transmit and receive message traffic around-the-clock.

They had fulfilled their primary mission of providing communications for other 2nd FSSG units during this exercise. Most importantly, they honed their skills for their upcoming exercise.

Basic Landing Support students use teamwork

Story and photos by
Cpl. Paul Schneider

"It builds up to this," said Pfc. Michael Gregory, Basic Landing Support instructor.

"It's exciting. We get to show what we do," Gregory continued. "It's the sale to everything we've learned."

For the Marines of basic landing support class 5-89 from MCES here, Feb. 18 was the first time doing helicopter support training.

Helicopter support training is the most important thing taught in the class," 1st Sgt. Andre Houston, BLS specialist instructor. "They will see more of that in the fleet."

Training for helicopter support starts from the beginning of the class with learning the nomenclature of equipment and how to hook it up. In addition, one important thing is stressed.

The main thing we stress is teamwork. We have to maintain that teamwork, otherwise we will lose communication in turn control of the situation," said 1st Sgt. Fredrick Josey, specialist instructor for BLS 5-89.

The Marines work in teams of eight: inside and outside director, who direct helicopter pilots, four leg men who are the harnesses are connected properly, a static man who removes the static electricity from the helicopter's hook and hook-up man who connects the harness to the helicopter's hook.

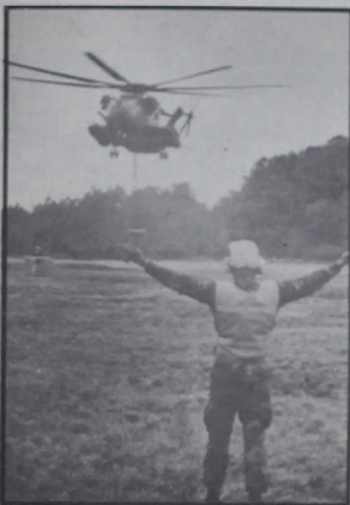

The pilots rely on this team to direct and to hook up the equipment.

"They are important," said 1st Lt. Tim Ceschin, CH-46 pilot with HMM-264. "We couldn't do it without them."

"We keep an eye on the inside director over him, then watch the outside director and listen to the crew chief tune," explained Ceschin.

Once the equipment is hooked up, the inside director will point the helicopter in proper direction, looking at the terrain where personnel and equipment are located and what is behind the helicopter," Josey said.

"With the load, we have to fly slower and cannot turn as sharply, explained 1st

READY FOR THE SENDOFF— The outside director signals to the pilot to lift the tractor off the ground while the team that was hooking up the tractor runs out of the way. Once the personnel are clear, the director observes where personnel, equipment and other aircraft are located and points the pilot in the proper direction to avoid them.

Lt. Mark R. Alexander, CH-46 pilot with HMM-264.

This actually isn't the first time the students have gotten something up in the air.

"We get a crane and simulate actual HSTs to show them the things to do and not to do. When they get out here, they can use that as a reference so they don't make too many mistakes," Houston explained.

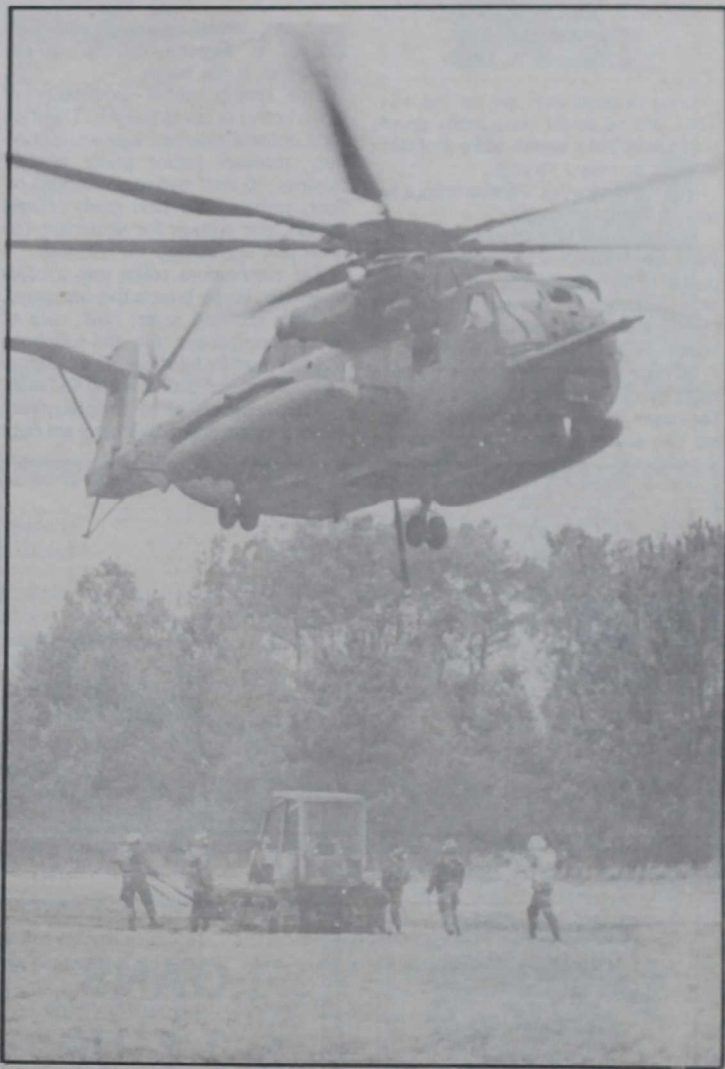

The recent training was with CH-46s in day and night operations.

"The night operations are very critical because of visibility. When the bird is over the load, you have to be constantly aware of where each other is," Josey said.

"You can really notice the teamwork now when working with the helicopters, because you really can't make any mistakes out there," said Pfc. Mark T. Williams, student.

The last day and night was the final challenge for the students.

"Most Marines are looking forward to taking on the CH-53Es. All they want to know is, "When are the 53s coming? When are the 53s coming?" Josey said.

"They look forward to meeting this gust of wind that will definitely tire you out. Plus, the charge coming off of the CH-46 is close to nothing, but the CH-53Es can produce up to 40,000 volts of electricity," Josey explained.

The wind from the CH-46 is about 100 mph, while from the CH-53E it is about 175 mph. The lift capability is also quite different. The CH-46 can carry 10,000 pounds, while the CH-53E can handle 32,000 pounds, Josey explained.

The Marines met the CH-53E Feb. 15. "The CH-46 is a fan compared to this," said Pvt. Leslie D. Watson. "The only problem is fighting the wind, but I think that's fun."

Most of the 25-30 students in the class agreed that the hardest job was the inside director's, because he has to direct the helicopter and is positioned right in the downwash, so he has to fight just to stay standing up.

From the beginning, the students are taught the importance of their job.

"We give them the whole beach scenario," explained Josey. "We teach them how the beach is going to be set up."

"We must get needed supplies up to the front to those Marines who are fighting the war. If we don't get those supplies up to them, something is going to go wrong, because Marines need food, ammunition, water and fuel to keep going," Josey said.

"We are more or less the lifeline that keeps those supplies moving up front. As long as we keep those supplies moving, there's no limit to what those men can do. That is something we really stress to them. Let's get that gear up front where they need it, and let's not let them down up there," Josey said.

The students also receive training as airfield arrival and departure airfield control groups, learning how to transport deploying units on Air Force and Marine Corps aircraft, Josey explained. They also get additional training in demolitions, land mine warfare and field fortifications, Josey added.

"The majority of the Marines in this class are going to 3rd LSB, 3rd FSSG, Okinawa," Josey said.

When in the fleet the Marines will get further indoctrination on port operations and MPS, Josey explained.

This group of Marines is anxious to get out into the fleet and they are very proud of their MOS.

"I like being with a winner. I feel this MOS is a winner. We are the only ones who wear the red patches. We stand out," Pfc. David Parker said.

Summer brings lottery to Camp Lejeune beaches

Story and photos by
Cpl. Deborah A. Drake

Long summer days are on the way. They will no doubt bring many people out in search of a suntan and a cool place to relax or take a swim.

The warm weather will also bring a lottery to Camp Lejeune.

Starting April 30, a lottery will be held. Participants won't need skill or a college degree to take part. Plenty of luck is the only requirement, because the winners receive a three or four night stay at the beach... for a small fee, of course.

"During the summer months, we have more people wanting to rent a place at the beach for a week or weekend than we can accommodate. That's why we have the lottery system," said Cpl. Rodney E. Hopson, NCOIC of the caretakers at the beach.

This system makes availability of beach homes as fair as possible. There are eight enlisted cabanas, four warrant officer through junior grade officers cabanas, 10 staff non-commissioned officers trailers, four field grade officers trailers, one cottage for lieutenant colonels and one cottage for colonels.

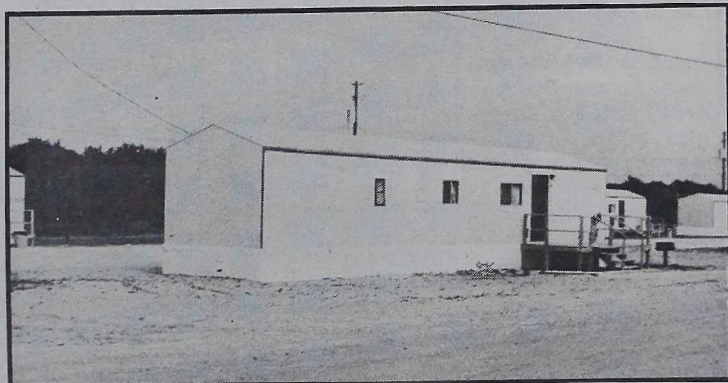

The reservations office uses a cards system to classify prospective occupants.

Cards showing name, rank, date of desired occupancy, unit, and telephone number must be filled out. The cards are sorted by desired date of rental and rank.

After being placed in the lottery container they are drawn so if there are eight railers available then 16 cards are drawn. The first eight are primary occupants and the eight extra cards form a standby list.

"We give each person two days to come in and pay for their reservation. If they don't, we call someone from the standby list," Hopson said.

"The beach homes are fully furnished. We provide clean sheets, dishes and cooking utensils. All that is needed are occupants and their necessities," Hopson added.

Priority in reserving cabanas will be given to active duty military personnel stationed here and at MCAS New River. Dependents whose sponsors are deployed are also authorized to make reservations.

Reservations can be made up to 40 days in advance, because the lottery is held 30 days before the beach home be occupied. Eligible people should or stop by the caretaker's house to reservations.

A campground is one of the features at Onslow Beach. There are full hookups and 18 partial hookup campers, and reservations can be made 30 days in advance with payment within two days.

The camp sites are assigned on a come first-served basis year-round they may be rented from one to two days.

A beach home may be the key to a golden tan this summer. But, unless you take a chance to be a big winner in the lottery, living on the beach is a dream.

FUTURE LEADERS— Heather Guernsey and Jessica O'Donovan discuss their experiences as pages for the North Carolina House of Representatives.

Local students serve as state pages

Cpl. Brenda Donnell

Although most people find the passage of bills through the legislative mill a mystery, two local teenagers got a chance to view proceedings up close recently.

Jessica O'Donovan, 16, and Heather Guernsey, 15, spent one week recently working as pages (messengers or errand runners) for the North Carolina House of Representatives.

Both are students at Lejeune High School and are senior Girl Scouts. They became aware of the program through Girl Scouting.

"We were chosen through Girl Scouts," Guernsey said. "They sent letters to representatives asking them to sponsor us."

"The only real qualifications seemed to be our interest and our willingness to participate," said O'Donovan.

These attributes seemed necessary, because they were kept busy attending a myriad of duties. They were responsible for answering telephones and running errands for the members of the house.

"People would call and say they needed a page, and we'd take papers to different representatives in other offices," said Guernsey.

Working in Raleigh gave the two students an opportunity that many will never receive — they witnessed the passage of several bills on issues including abortion and teachers' pay raises, they said.

"When we weren't actually doing anything, we could watch the procedures," O'Donovan said. "It was so neat!"

Although both seemed to feel that the opportunity was interesting and exciting, neither expressed a strong desire for a future political career.

O'Donovan does, however, plan to participate in the program again next year, and Guernsey is planning a trip to Washington, D.C. this month through the Close Up Program. Maybe these plans and their recent trip will inspire them to change their minds and become our future leaders.

2nd CEB holds field meet

Marines from 2nd Combat Engineers Bn., 2nd Marine Expeditionary Force, demonstrated their engineering skills and teamwork during a field meet recently held at the range.

The event pitted 20-man teams, representing the companies of 2nd CEB, against each other in a series of physical and mental contests.

The first contest of the day was the truck pull. Using 100-foot rope and the strength of 20 men, the teams were required to pull a five-ton dump truck while being timed. Charlie Co. took first place in the competition, with a time of 24:41.

Another highlight of the event was a land mine throw. The land mine throw was very similar to the javelin throw. A wide range of throwing techniques were used, many of them humorous. The crowd cheered with laughter on a few occasions when the land mine was flung in the opposite direction it was intended to go.

Charlie Co. took first place again, with a combination of three throws for 110 yards, hurling them in the lead.

Charlie Co. Marines again demonstrated they were on the edge of the competition as they axed their way to first place of the tree cutting competition. The next contest was the log cutting with the use of chainsaws. One competitor from each company used a toothy machine to cut three pieces of wood in the quickest time. Support Co. took top honors and began to give Charlie Co. a heated race for first place.

Next, Marines began to participate in what was without a doubt the most grueling and taxing event of the day — erecting the GP tent. Each team consisted of six Marines. The teams were required to run a quarter-mile woodland course while carrying the 150-pound tent and accessories. Some of the troops devised special ways to transport the items, building wheelbarrows, sleds and four-man carrying racks.

Bravo Co. returned from the woodland run first. In a rush to erect the tent, the team used improper procedures and had to start over. By this time, Support Co. had returned to the building site, erected its tent and took first place in the event.

The tug-of-war competitions were held in between the other contests in a single-elimination tournament.

A final battle between Alpha Co. and Bravo Co. concluded the day's activities in a climatic grand finale. It was a virtual standstill as the rope grew taut, the competitor's faces grew red and veins bulged from their necks.

But, a count of men by the referee, revealed that Bravo Co. had 21 Marines in what was supposed to be a 20 man team. This gave Alpha Co. the win in the tug-of-war competition.

Once the scores were tallied, Charlie Co. was pronounced the winner of the 2nd CEB field meet. Support Co. took second, Bravo placed third, Alpha slid into fourth and H&S took fifth.

"I am very happy with the energy and motivation that was displayed here," said Lt. Col. K. O. Randel, 2nd CEB, CO.

"I think the competition demonstrated to the spectators as well as the participants the absolute need for teamwork in today's Marine Corps," Randel concluded.

Panama Security Force Marines sit back, relax with 'smoker'

Story and photos by
1st Lt. Ken White

RODMAN NAVAL STATION, Panama — Marines have fought "in every clime and place" for more than 213 years, but the Marines and Sailors of Marine Forces Panama have added a slightly new dimension to this well-known strain of the Marines' Hymn.

Providing security with M-16A2s is the mission for Charlie Co., 1st Bn., 6th Marines on most nights. On this night, they packed a different kind of "punch" that proved equally as deadly.

Charlie Co. staged an eight-bout boxing smoker here recently that also included Marines from Marine Security Force Company and BSSG-6. The result was three hours of fistic enjoyment both for the boxers and the large crowd that turned out to witness the Marines do battle.

Bout one kicked off with "Cold Steel's" (Charlie Co.'s nickname) Danny "Sure Thing" Babb unleashing furious barrages upon his MSFC opponent, Fredrick "Damien" Lubrecht. Sizzling left hooks and jabs by Babb sealed his victory in the third and final round and he was declared the winner in a 3-0 decision.

Charlie Co.'s Audres "The Man Eater" Yosordia staged a cocky but effective show of force in the third match-up of the evening against opponent Patrick "The Man" Bartley from the MARFOR's Fleet Anti-Terrorist Security Team. A calculating "Man Eater" feasted on a sluggish and wary Bartley in the first two rounds, stealing the show and bringing a roaring approval from the crowd. A third round rally spurred FAST's hopes as Bartley twice manhandled a faltering Yasordia into the ropes with an impressive combination of punches. Having not yet satisfied his appetite, "The Man Eater" circled in for a few last minute bites to seal Bartley's fate in a 3-0 decision.

Bout six saw the marriage of contrasts as a fireplug, Trenton "The Raging Bull" Zoecckler met Ichabod Crane double Mike Parsons from MSFC. After clocking Parsons to kick off the fight, the much-shorter Zoecckler took his opponent to the inside, delivering crushing sets of blows to the midsection which drew a standing-eight count. Parsons staged a fierce comeback in round two, but the "Bull" continued to gore his opponent, lifting him off the canvas with sledgehammer blows to the solar plexus and extinguishing the flame. Zoecckler reigned victorious as he went on to win the bout with a 3-0 decision.

"Pulling this smoker off was a company effort," said 2nd Lt. D. H. Gurfein, Charlie Co. 1/6, planner of the event. "We're spreading our different missions and the success was that we succeeded in bringing the entire Marine community together down here in Panama in a social situation for some friendly competition, relax and have fun."

Karate!

2nd Lt. Drexel D. Heard, Bravo Co., 8th Motor Transport Bn., 2nd FSGG, is a karate black belt and the instructor of a karate class taught at Marston Pavilion. He recently won four trophies in Holbrooks Third Annual National Karate Championship: Overall form competitor, first place in weapons, first place in karate form and second place in lightweight fighting.

Take me out to the ball game? not without grounds, maintenance

Story and photos by
Cpl. Juvonnie Z. Kinchen

The fans are roaring, cheering the victory. The stands clear and the stadium, gymnasium or court is empty.

No one is left to cheer for the last team... a team that has only six members... the Grounds and Maintenance Section of Consolidated Special Services, MCB.

These Marines, along with Neill E. Shai, grounds and maintenance outdoor facilities manager, are responsible for the upkeep of the baseball and softball fields, the basketball, tennis and volleyball courts, the youth soccer fields and the Little League baseball fields on base.

They sweep the courts, line the fields, put up the nets and do whatever else needs to be done before, during and after each contest.

There seems to be a misconception that this particular team is also responsible for athletic fields used by the commands here.

"A lot of people think we're responsible for all the fields on base, and we're not," Shai said. "We're only responsible for the athletic fields used for intramural sports."

"However, if a command like 10th Marines says they want a basketball court put up, we have them pick out the area and I go and check it. If checks out, we dig the holes, put up the poles and nets," Shai said. "After that it's their responsibility."

The grounds and maintenance crew have 18 intramural fields, courts and gymnasiums to take care of in various locations throughout Courthouse Bay, French Creek, Hospital Point, Camp Johnson and Camp Geiger, according to Shai.

"We don't have the time, manpower or equipment to take care of all the other athletic fields and courts on base," Shai said. "During the season the fields have to be done every day because there are at least 12 games a night being played."

These people also support the participants directly, by providing towels, water, scorebooks and roster forms if necessary.

For the most part, working in grounds and maintenance has its ups and down, according to Cpl. W. E. Brown, grounds and maintenance crew.

"We may get a little more time off than most Marines, but we do work hard for it. A lot of people think we (the grounds and maintenance crew) don't do any work. I suggest they come out and spend a day with us and see for themselves," Brown said.

SEPARATION AGREEMENT

If you and your spouse are not going to live together, you should enter into a separation agreement. Even though a conviction may seem likely to you, an attorney can help by (a) possibly reducing your fine; (b) reducing the number of days in jail, and/or community service; (c) having your court date set at a more convenient date for you. The legal fee for first offense is

AUTO ACCIDENT

If you have been injured in an automobile accident, you do not know what your claim is worth. And, you should not be in a hurry to settle your claim. Remember that serious or costly injuries do not always result in immediate pain or bloodshed, and once you settle your claim, you cannot obtain further compensation from the responsible party. You should seek the assistance of any attorney to help you in handling the problems resulting from an accident.

Fee is paid only upon a monetary recovery for you.
